President Roosevelt struck verbally yesterday at "foreign propagandists who seek to divide us with their strategy of terror" as Justice Department agents "moved in" on the German-controlled Transocean News Service, ordering a grand jury investigation of its chief in United States, Manfred Zapp.

A few hours after Secretary of War Stimson had declared that sabotage attempts by Germany "and other belligerents" were "far more dangerous" in this war than in the World War, the President flung his renewed challenge at totalitarian "slanders to our democracy."

The national defense program and our resolve to defend the two American continents and their ocean highways are an answer—"in characteristically American terms"—to this "contempt," the President said.

Complications Feared

His challenge was contained in a nationally broadcast address which brought to a close the New York Herald Tribune Forum.

Ordering the investigation of Zapp, Attorney General Jackson said that the Justice Department would present to the District grand jury both evidence gathered by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a file of data about the Transocean News Service which had been turned over to the State Department by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The State Department had been reported to be reluctant to use this information, for fear of diplomatic complications with Germany. Attorney General Jackson would not

The Gallup Poll

Willkie Gains In N.Y., Trails Now Slightly

By Dr. George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 24.—One of the biggest question marks of the Presidential campaign is where New York State will be on election day, with its 47 electoral votes—more than the total electoral votes of the eight Rocky Mountain States.

An important factor is the substantial block of new voters in New York City. Which party stands to gain most by the 17 per cent increase in registration there?

Latest sampling by the Institute, covering the period October 14-22, finds the State continues to be in Roosevelt's column, but by a reduced majority. Willkie has gained one full percentage point.

Today's Poll

Roosevelt	51%
Willkie	49

October 18 Poll

Roosevelt	52%
Willkie	48

In both surveys the proportion of voters undecided in their choice was 9 per cent.

Half of Vote in City

Approximately one-half of New York State's vote in a national election is cast in the city, and the other half in the upstate areas. As everybody knows, the city has in the past gone overwhelmingly Democratic and the rest of the State overwhelmingly Republican. The same situation prevails today, although the survey finds a sharper loss for Roosevelt in the city than in the upstate areas since the 1936 election.

In that year the President carried the city with 76 per cent of the major party vote; upstate he polled 45 per cent. Here are the poll results today:

	Roosevelt	Willkie
New York City	61%	39%
Upstate	40	60
Total State	51	49

In view of the fact that the 1 per cent difference between the strength of the two candidates for the whole State is well within the probable error in sampling techniques—which is 4 per cent on the average—New York State cannot be regarded in any light except as doubtful at this time.

To get some indication of the Presidential preference of the new voters, the Institute interviewed 3,500 registrants during the last two days of registration.

The results indicate that the Democrats stand to gain by the increase in registration. The new registrants are apparently planning to note the way the majority of other people in the city are voting—that is, for Roosevelt.

Evenly Divided

The interviewing showed the following:

Republican Asks Decent Housing And 'No Wrong Side of the Tracks'

(Willkie's Texts, Pages 6 and 9.)

By William B. Ardery
Associated Press Staff Writer

Akron, Ohio, Oct. 24.—Wendell L. Willkie tonight described the New Deal concept of collective bargaining as "reactionary" and said he wanted "to put an end to this era of bad feeling" between labor and industry.

He reiterated that he wanted to keep already achieved social gains, and said:

"We intend to put the whole power of Government behind a drive to abolish the slums of our great cities and to give decent housing to all our people, both in the cities and on the farms.

"America should be a land where there is no wrong side of the railroad tracks, and we will make it just that."

"Spirit of America"

Returning to the city where he practiced law for 11 years, the Republican Presidential nominee declared that "the true purpose of collective bargaining is to achieve a coordination of effort by the American people and coordination between them."

"The New Deal has created bad blood between certain groups in industry and certain groups in labor," he said. "With the help of the leaders, both of labor and of industry, I want to put an end to this era of bad feeling.

"I want to unify the spirit of America. With the help of both, we cannot fail."

He was cheered loudly when he entered Goodyear Hall, where all 6,400 seats were filled. The 3,000 seats in an adjacent theater also were taken.

Taft Praises Campaign

Signs hung along the balcony said, "Put an Akron man in the White House."

Senator Taft, Republican, of Ohio, introduced the nominee, and said the latter "is putting on the best and most courageous campaign of our lifetime."

Before beginning his prepared talk, Willkie recalled his years spent as an attorney here and added that "I don't think there is anybody in Akron who would ever say that anybody ever controlled Wendell Willkie's thinking."

Willkie came here for three evening meetings after asserting in a national broadcast at noon that the New Deal had written a record "of broken promises and failures of performance so staggering as to shock the faith of the American people."

Mrs. Willkie Given Bouquet

That address, from his private railroad car on a siding at Harbor Creek, Pa., was in reply to President Roosevelt's Philadelphia speech. Willkie contended that the President had failed to keep Democratic platform pledges, had not brought reemployment, and had helped the rise of dictators in Europe.

Speaking in the Akron Armory, in one of his talks here, Willkie was greeted with prolonged cheering and hand clapping. It was in that building that he had helped

Petain Believed Bowing to Axis; U. S. Ready to Occupy French Bases If Status Is Imperilled

Washington Has Plans Made to Act Under Havana Pact if Necessary

By the Associated Press

The United States, acting in cooperation with other American republics, was said reliably last night to have plans ready for occupying French territory in the Caribbean area in case such a step is deemed necessary from a hemisphere defense viewpoint.

Signs of possibly closer cooperation between France and the Axis powers were creating intense interest here. The talks of Adolf Hitler with Marshal Henri Petain and Vice Premier Pierre Laval were watched closely for any indication of a new trend in French policy which might affect France's colonial empire or its fleet.

U. S. Has Wide Latitude

The broad terms of the recent act of Havana allowed wide latitude to the American republics in determining the circumstances under which French or other European possessions in this hemisphere might be seized.

It provided for emergency action when any of these areas "are in danger of becoming the subject of barter of territory or change of sovereignty."

The fact that the French Ambassador to the United States, Gaston Henri Haye, paid an unexpected visit to the State Department last evening was taken as an indication of the concern felt by United States officials over the possible course of French policy.

It was reported that the envoy was called to the department by Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, and while there was no announcement as to the nature of the talk, it was believed that Welles outlined the Government's attitude toward closer collaboration between France and the Axis.

Might Desire Information

It also was considered possible that he asked for information concerning French policy. It was stated authoritatively, however, that Welles made no mention during the conference of the possibilities inherent in the Act of Havana.

[Disturbing international relations prompted President Roosevelt to call Secretary of State Hull into conference soon after the President's return from Philadelphia later. The two were said to have gone over dispatches which had arrived during the President's absence.

Consults Army Chiefs

[Following that conference, Mr. Roosevelt called in Assistant Secretary of War Patterson and Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff.

[Asked whether the dispatches studied by the President foreshadowed critical developments in Europe, Presidential Secretary Stephen T. Early replied:

[Meanwhile, relations between the United States and Russia were surveyed in another conference between Undersecretary of State Welles and Constantine A. Oumansky.

Port-of-Spain Eagerly Waits For Yankees

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, Oct. 24.—This southernmost island of the British West Indies eagerly awaits the arrival of the vanguard of Yanks who are to convert the island into a key base in America's new defense frontier.

The Indians who once inhabited this mountainous island called it "Iere," meaning "The Land of the Humming Bird."

It was Christopher Columbus who gave it the name it now bears. Approaching the island on July 31, 1498, the pious navigator was impressed by the sight of three mountains looming ahead. To him they suggested the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity, and so in the name of their Catholic Majesties of Spain, he called the island Trinidad.

To the members of the United States mission of Army, Navy and Marine Corps experts who were here recently, Trinidad suggested another figure. It suggested an anchor for the great chain of air and naval bases that Uncle Sam is about to throw around the Caribbean Sea and the Panama Canal.

Polyglot Population

Trinidad, lying within sight of Venezuela on the South American mainland, is destined to become a base of great strategic value, not only because it commands a heretofore vulnerable approach to the Panama Canal but because it is an important point on a great air highway to South America. Also it will provide an operating base for the Navy, one which will permit America's men-o'-war to operate effectively almost to the African coast.

Many a young American flier, now earning his wings in the States, will some day be coming down here to mingle with Trinidad's polyglot population—its small minority of whites, its blacks of all shades, its turbaned East Indians, its Chinese and its many mixed breeds.

What will the Army and Navy do here in Trinidad?

Rear Admiral John W. Greenslade and the other ten members of the United States mission of experts arrived in Port-of-Spain on the cruiser St. Louis on October 10, a month and a week after announcement of the momentous deal whereby Uncle Sam gave John Bull 50 destroyers for 99-year leases and the right to establish bases on Trinidad, British Guiana, St. Lucia, Antigua, Jamaica and the Bahamas Islands.

Explored By Plane

The American officers did a thorough job of exploration. They had brought along two seaplanes, the huge, four-engined transport on which Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox flew over the Pacific, and a smaller, two-engined job. Also they had use of the catapult planes on the U. S. S. St. Louis.

The Navy men flew over the great

Bern, Switzerland, Oct. 24.—The conclusion that France has finally agreed to limited cooperation with Germany against Britain in return for an easing of the Nazi yoke was drawn by informed quarters tonight from the personal conference this afternoon between victor and vanquished—Adolf Hitler of Germany, and old Marshal Philippe Petain of France.

The two protagonists, the one in field gray, the other in the horizon blue of the French army of an earlier day, conferred at length in Hitler's private railway car near Tours, in German-occupied France.

The only official word was that there was such a meeting. Their conclusions were not stated.

It appeared certain, however, that France was drawn into Hitler's "new European order."

Vichy Denies Alliance

(In Vichy, government officials said "the future of our country is at stake," and hinted the negotiations have taken a "historic turn." They maintained, however, there could be no question of going to war against England or turning the French fleet or air force against the former ally.)

Informed observers in this neutral corner reiterated that France probably would regain part of the area now occupied by Germany, with Petain achieving his dream of re-

A thorough-going reorganization and expansion of the Army Air Corps with the object of making it competent to defend any portion of the Western Hemisphere was announced yesterday by the War Department.

Headquarters will be moved from Langley Field, Va., to Bolling Field here.

Later, when King Carol set up the authoritarian regime of Dr. Miron Cristea, he charged Carol was a dictator and declared he would not return to Rumania until the people regained their liberties.)

Russia to Join Axis in Parley On Danube

Observers Believe Near East Deal Is Real Object of Meeting

By the United Press

Moscow, Oct. 24.—Germany, Italy, Rumania and Russia will meet in a four-power Danubian conference at Bucharest Monday, October 28, the foreign affairs commissariat announced tonight.

[A Russian delegation, appointed by the Soviet foreign commissariat, was expected to arrive in Bucharest tomorrow and immediately enter into preliminary negotiations, International News Service reported from Bucharest.

[It was officially explained that the Soviet Union is taking part in the Danube commission because it now borders that river since its acquisition of Bessarabia and north Bukovina from Rumania.

Near East May Be Topic

British Claim Victory Over Italian Patrol

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 24.—British general headquarters announced tonight that Italian forces suffered 50 killed and 400 wounded in a bitter patrol battle on the frontier of Eritrea and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Saturday night and Sunday morning.

There were no British losses, the announcement said.

Another successful British raid was announced on an Italian encampment in Egypt's western desert, east of Sidi Barrani, Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

Rome, Oct. 24 (AP).—Italian outposts at two places near Sidi Barrani, Egypt, were reported today by the high command to have beaten off an attack by British mechanized forces supported by artillery.

At the same time the high command acknowledged that the Italian destroyer, Francesco Nullo, had been seriously damaged in a Red Sea battle with British naval forces several days ago and had been scuttled near the coast.

(Sinking of the Francesco Nullo, a 1,056-ton craft, was reported by the British admiralty Tuesday. The Italians previously had reported six British merchant ships were sunk and one of their own torpedo boats slightly damaged.)

Misplaced Confidence

Two Wolves in Cheats' Clothing Taught Finesse by Grandma

Two confidence men and a 65-year-old grandmother met in a battle of wits in a downtown hotel last week and the grandmother emerged the winner—they cashed her rubber check for $250.

But as usual in such matters, the police are having the last laugh. The trio is being held for investigation.

Detective Sergt. Chester Stepp revealed the facts in the comedy of errors with the arrest of the principals. The men are typical movietype "smoothies." The woman is a dear old lady with pink cheeks, twinkling eyes and . . . a police record.

Stepp said that according to a communication from St. Petersburg, Fla., the woman deposited a bad check there for $5,000 and immediately wrote and cashed one against the account for $450. She then came to Washington, deposited another bogus check for $1,500 in a local bank and drew a $100 draft against it, he said.

In the meantime she sat in the lobby of her hotel, a kindly soul, apparently of independent means. Her guileless manner attracted the New York "con" men and they proceeded to bait her—with dinners, corsages and chocolates.

Her bank book, they learned, according to Stepp, showed a healthy balance and later they found out she was not averse to honest investments "if she could make a profit."

But, she said, she needed a little cash for sundry expenses and would have to cash a check. Glad to accommodate the lady, the male baiters cashed a draft for $250, apparently positive of the success of their scheme and a handsome profit.

The check bounced and the police walked in, proving, no doubt, that turn about is fair play.

Another Strike—They're Out!

Union Puts On War Paint To Preserve 4-Coat Tradition

A new strike was called yesterday on the new Social Security Board Building, threatening to delay its occupancy by the National Defense Advisory Commission, scheduled for November 15.

Following a succession of labor disputes in the last year, the project's latest obstacle is a walkout of union painters in protest against a substitution in the kind of paint used.

Officials of the Public Buildings Administration, which is supervising construction, gave the following explanation:

Wall plaster must be dry before ordinary lead and oil paint can be applied. Using a certain other mixture, however, painting can be started while the plaster is wet. This would save time and the National Defense Advisory Commission, now housed in crowded and dispersed quarters, is in a hurry to move into the centralized building.

The rub is that only two coats of the special paint are necessary, compared with four of the other. That means less work—and less wages—for the painters. A Public Buildings Administration said the switchover would save the Government $12,800. This, he added, is only incidental, since the purpose is to expedite the job.

Already the Government has spent thousands of dollars extra to advance the building's completion date, he added, which makes it obvious that economy isn't the reason for the change in specifications.

A representative of Painters Union Local No. 363 confirmed the report that members did not appear for work yesterday but declined to discuss the issue, except to say that the men will stay out until they are authorized to return by the union's executive board.

Hitler Bargains With Petain

turning the tri-color to his beloved Paris.

The price, they said, was the handing over of French sea and air bases in the Mediterranean, Africa and the Near East for German-Italian use against Britain.

The observers believed Petain saw Hitler merely to confirm an agreement already drawn at the Hitler-Laval parley.

[Informed persons in Vichy said the next step would be consultation by Petain with the Vichy cabinet, but pointed out that, if he chose, the old marshal had the power to conclude an accord without his ministers' assent.]

Would Lend Bases

To what degree France will be forced to aid in the military plans of the Axis was uncertain, but government sources at Vichy said emphatically that Petain and former Allied-Generalissimo Weygand, under no circumstances would sign any documents leading France into war with Britain.

Diplomatic sources said, however, the agreement would permit the Axis to use French air and naval bases for a double-barreled offensive against Britain's Mediterranean and South Atlantic lines of communication and the British blockade on Europe.

Hitler's visit to the Spanish border for a face-to-face talk with Generalissimo Francisco Franco for the first time also was reported to have the same objective—the use of Spanish ports and airfields, not only on the mainland, but in the Canaries.

French sources reported Hitler used the argument, both with Spain and France, that unless the British blockade is broken both will be in a precarious position for food before spring.

Dakar in West Africa, Toulon on the Mediterranean, Bizerte in Tunisia, and Casablanca in Morroco, which it was reported the Axis will use, are strategically situated for an air and sea offensive in the Eastern Mediterranean and South Atlantic, synchronized with a land, sea and air offensive in the Near East.

While the frontier of unoccupied France will be moved northward to the Seine and Paris, it was reported, Germany will keep control of the Atlantic seaboard and a strip contiguous to Switzerland and Germany for military purposes.

In addition to the terms mentioned, there may be other concessions from the Germans, such as release of all French war prisoners and the turning over of certain civil powers to French administration in the occupied zone, but the return to Paris was termed the main consideration—that and avoidance of possible German occupation of all of France.

[Petain also is seeking the relaxation of the control between the Vichy and Nazi occupied zones in order to allow free exchange of surplus foodstocks and facilitate food distribution as winter sets in, the United Press Vichy correspondent reported.

[All these matters, he said Vichy sources claimed, must be taken into consideration before the Petain government is ready to engage in permanent full collaboration with Germany.]

Laval was reported to have hoped to win a definite peace treaty, ending the uncertain period of the armistice, but to have encountered German demands for an outright alliance.

To this Petain would not agree, these reports added, so the compromise was arranged.

Berlin, Oct. 24 (AP).—Hitler's talk with the 84-year-old Marshal Petain followed meetings in the past two days with French Vice Premier Pierre Laval and Generalissimo Francisco Franco of Spain—talks which the Nazis here say show how England, "the encircler," is herself now tightly encircled.

As in the two previous conferences, German Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop sat at Hitler's side. Laval accompanied Petain.

The official silence characterizing Hitler's current diplomatic journey still prevailed, and there was no hint here as to whether Petain would sign an agreement ending the twilight period between the armistice and peace as reported abroad.

Political circles in Berlin said it was realized that whatever form the dovetailing of France into the Axis plans may take, the status of peace between the two nations must first be established.

Informed Germans here said, meanwhile, that it is too much to expect that Spain will actually go to war against Britain, at least for the present.

[The New York Times said the Franco-Hitler meeting was hailed in Rome as another proof of Spain's solidarity with the Axis and that Italians believe Spain's entrance into the war is a foregone conclusion. It was pointed out that Italy is vitally interested in eliminating Gilbraltar as a British naval base, and it was stressed that the sky, Soviet Ambassador.—Editor's note.]

The Havana pact, adopted by the 21 republics last July, called for creation of a committee with a representative from each country to assume the administration of "the region attacked or threatened." It was to be constituted when two-thirds, or 14, of the nations had designated representatives.

Completed Yesterday

The committee came into being today with the appointment of the fourteenth member by Ecuador. Others now represented on the committee are Bolivia, Brazil, Costa Rica, Cuba, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Dominican Republic, Venezuela and the United States. Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, is the United States member.

Any of the American republics could have acted singly or jointly in assuming control before the committee was established.

The French colonies which might be seized in the event the Vichy government's policy became more pliant to Germany and Italy included the islands of Martinique and Guadaloupe in the eastern Caribbean approach to the Panama Canal, and French Guiana, on the South American mainland.

Off the coast of Newfoundland, where the United States has acquired naval and air base sites, are the French islands of Miquelon and St. Pierre.

Martinique Focal Point.

Martinique has been under especially close American surveillance as a possible trouble spot because of some 100 American-made military planes taken there on the French aircraft carrier Bearn immediately after the Franco-German armistice. British naval vessels also have maintained a watch to prevent the removal of the planes or the Bearn. A French cruiser is also at the island and $250,000,000 in French gold is said to be cached there.

The United States has been negotiating with France for the return of the planes but the necessity of obtaining permission of the Franco-German Armistice Commission has been an obstacle.

Should occupation of any French colonies be decided upon, it was believed that American naval forces would carry it out with consent of the other American Republics represented on the emergency committee.

The occupying forces might be sent from the United States naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

R.A.F. Blasts Berlin, Sinks 2 Nazi Ships

Fliers Brave Heavy Barrage to Strike Power, Rail Centers

By Raymond Daniell.

Copyright by New York Times

London, Oct. 24.—The air ministry announced tonight that Royal Air Force bombers carried out their twenty-second raid on Berlin last night, pasting central powerhouses and railroad yards there, while other British planes spread havoc over industrial Germany, bombed ports and sank two supply ships in the North Sea.

The British planes, which arrived over the German capital after midnight, spent two hours over the city. During the visit they unloaded many bombs over the Berliner Electrical Works in the Charlottenburg area and the Klingenburg powerhouse on the other side of the city. They also attacked the Templehof, Pulitzstrasse and Lehrter railroad yards, doing considerable damage, according to reports brought home by bomber crews.

The last of the British raiders left Berlin about 4 a. m. this morning. On their journey to the German capital, it was said, the British planes flew through thick clouds and low temperatures which caused serious ice conditions on their wings.

Run Into Heavy Fire

Near Berlin, however, the British raiders found a broken cloud formation which enabled them, after considerable reconnoitering, to pick out the objectives of their attack and also made it possible for them to hide occasionally from searchlights and ground batteries. On approaching Berlin they said they encountered heavy antiaircraft fire from the suburbs, but this was just a sample of what they ran into over the center of the city itself.

The pilot of one plane said he picked out the Potsdamer railroad station, flew over it, turned around and came back alongside, making a straight run over the target before releasing his bombs. At the crucial moment, he said, another plane put down a flare and he was able to carry out his attack on "a straight level." A few minutes later, the pilot said, he saw fires break out, and another plane laid down more bombs a quarter of a mile ahead.

The pilot of another plane said he made six separate runs over the Charlottenburg power station before dropping his bombs. He said he had the satisfaction of seeing the bombs hit their mark and fires break out. Incendiary bombs and high explosives started many fires in the railroad yards, according to other pilots.

Emden Docks Hit

While the R. A. F. was attacking Berlin another section of the bomber force attacked the docks at Emden. The first onslaught from the air on this objective began at 1:30 a. m. and lasted a half hour before a second heavier force arrived to continue the attack for another hour. Hundreds of bombs and incendiaries were unloaded, it was said, on the docks adjacent to the railroad yards. One bomb was reported to have started a fire in a timber yard, which served as a convenient beacon for later arrivals overhead.

One aircraft which flew right over Berlin attacked a large factory with its own railroad sidings, and one bomb, it was reported here, burst near the foundation of one of the main buildings. Another pilot reported bombing the railroad yards at Frankfurt.

Other objectives attacked in the widespread night raids on enemy territory included a factory 40 miles east of Bremen, where night work was progressing, Dornier factories at Wismar, on the Baltic coast, a factory at Brunsbuttel, at the mouth of the Elbe, and two oil refineries at Hanover and Magdeburg, both of which were damaged in earlier raids.

In addition, several airports in Germany and Nazi-occupied territory, and docks and shipping at the Hook, Holland, also were heavily attacked and bombed, according to official statements. Harbors at Rotterdam and Flushing, freight yards at Hamm and Coblenz, and aluminum works at Hearring also were attacked.

Another official announcement during the day said aircraft of the coastal command "torpedoed two Nazi supply ships in the North Sea and raked decks of a third with machine-gun fire."

The German vessels were in a convoy off the Frisian Islands when they were attacked. The ship which was machine-gunned also was in a convoy off Trondheim.

Nazis Report Slight Damage

Berlin, Oct. 24 (AP).—A German communique said today that British fliers during the night attempted a "large scale attack" upon Berlin, but only a few of them reached the capital to drop incendiary bombs, incendiary leaflets and a few explosive bombs.

Minor property damage was inflicted among some west end houses, it said, and a few injuries were reported.

King Carol Seeking Aid Of Roosevelt

Wants President To Induce Spanish Officials to Free Him

By the Associated Press

Lisbon, Portugal, Oct. 24.—The exiled former King Carol of Rumania, detained in Seville, Spain, with red-haired Mme. Magda Lupescu, sought today through a faithful follower to put himself under the "protection" of President Roosevelt.

Jean Pangal, one-time Rumanian minister to Lisbon and now the harassed former monarch's personal representative, asked Warden M. Wilson, the United States charge d'affaires here, to appeal to Mr. Roosevelt for help in Carol's behalf.

Promised Haven in Portugal

Specifically requested was the President's intercession to induce the Spanish authorities to allow Carol, Mme. Lupescu, and his former palace minister, Ernst Urdareanu, to come to Portugal. They have been promised asylum here and Carol, in turn, has pledged himself to remain here throughout the war and to refrain from all political activity.

The American Legation was studying the request.

[Washington diplomatic circles reported Tuesday that Ignace Jan Paderewski, Polish pianist and statesman, had been released from Spanish detention through the good offices of President Roosevelt. There was no confirmation, however.]

The fact that Carol, Mme. Lupescu and Urdareanu were under virtual arrest in Seville was disclosed yesterday. Originally they had been ordered to go to Granada while the Spanish government considered extradition to Rumania, but subsequently they were allowed to remain in Seville pending the decision.

Hated by Iron Guard

Unofficially, it apeared that the Rumanians particularly sought Mme. Lupescu and Urbareanu, who long have been bitterly attacked by the pro-Nazi Rumanian Iron Guard—which was largely responsible for driving Carol from the throne last September. Members of Carol's suite said that if Mme. Lupescu had to go back to face her enemies he probably would insist upon going, too.

Pangal declared Carol's detention had followed the circulation of reports by a German news agency that he was planning to go to London and form a new Rumanian government under British protection. In spite of the fact that the former King had denied any such intention, Pangal added, his arrest soon followed.

Britain Holds U. S. Planes for 'Blitz'

Joubert Promises To Repay Germans '7-Fold' in Spring

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 24.—A vast reserve of American-built bombing and fighting planes is being held ready in hidden airdromes to play a major role in Britain's own "aerial blitzkrieg" which the R. A. F. intends to unleash against Germany in the spring, it was disclosed tonight.

Air Marshal Sir Philip Joubert, in a radio broadcast tonight, said that the flow of United States planes to Britain "will become a flood" by spring, and that "'we shall then return to Germany with sevenfold interest, the bombing we have had to endure."

But Air Marshal Joubert told only part of the story.

American warplanes of various types, including some of the fastest and highest performance aircraft ever developed, are already at British air fields in large numbers.

[The British Broadcasting Corporation announced tonight, in a broadcast quoted by the National Broadcasting Co., that "the United States is sending warplanes to Britain now at the rate of nearly 500 a month; this number is still growing and is over five times as many as were sent four months ago."]

British Planes Improved

Joubert, in his cheering radio message to the British people, said that developments greatly improving the effectiveness of Britain's Spitfire and Hurricane fighters already have been installed, giving them greater speed and heavier armament.

Several new types of fighters are available, more deadly than the Spitfires and Hurricanes, he said, adding that the new Boulton-Paul Defiants are being used as night fighters "with new developments which should be very effective."

Promising still more deadlines and greater numbers of R. A. F. planes for offense and defense, Marshal Joubert said:

"We can hope from now on to steadily increase the pressure on Germany and her ally and by next spring, when the flow of American aircraft—already very considerable—becomes a flood we shall return to Germany with sevenfold interest the bombing we have had to endure."

Joubert said statistics show that in practically all of their night attacks on London the German planes have bombed from an altitude of 14,000 feet or more, which is far too high for accuracy, especially when the pilots are busy dodging heavy shellfire and coping with poor visibility.

Quality vs. Quantity

Easily the best known of American planes now in service is the Lockheed Hudson all-purpose reconnaisance bomber. Fitted with a power-operated gun turret, which has been the secret of hundreds of British air victories, the Hudson proved to be a fast, efficient machine, well able to take care of itself and, above all, amazingly capable of absorbing punishment. It has been used chiefly on long coastal command reconnaisance flights, which have been carried on incessantly since the war broke out and which became a vital defense factor when invasion forces began massing across the Channel.

A second United States machine, the Douglas DB7, imported more recently, may, if present developments continue, step from the normal role of dive bomber into that of fighter. In addition to other good flying characteristics, it has a tricycle landing gear, ideal for night landings.

British experience against the German air force seems to indicate that quality, to a large extent, is preferable to quantity.

It is realized here that Germany undoubtedly has new and improved planes on assembly lines but the retooling of the entire German aviation is a colossal task. The British think that they, with American help, will be able to keep a qualitative edge while slowly closing the gap in numbers.

["As the Germans change their tactics in the air, so the methods used to attack them must vary," Joubert explained, the Associated Press reported.

["At first, when they came into London flying a straight and steady course, barrage fire was employed. But when they began to jink (dodge) it was obvious that this method would not do, and so now firing is more intermittent but designed to effect surprise.

["If the enemy can be lulled into a sense of false security, so that he will fly straight for a short while, a salvo from several guns has a good chance of bursting near him.

["Hence the pauses in firing—we are waiting the opportunity to get in a good burst. I hope this explanation will dispose of some rumors that have come to my ear in which it is said that our guns are wearing out and that ammunition is running short. I can assure you that the situation is quite normal and is not causing anxiety to those responsible . . ."]

Italians Define Hostility to U. S.

Duce's Editors Call Present Attitude 'Non-Belligerency'

By the Associated Press

Rome, Oct. 24.—Mario Appelius, a commentator in Premier Mussolini's own newspaper, declared today the German-Italian attitude toward the United States was one of "nonbelligerency"—the precise term used to define Italy's status before she entered the war last June.

Another jouralistic spokesman of similar authority, Virginio Gayda, publicly questioned whether "the United States rearmament program "is not merely a conventional mask hiding a deliberate plan of aggression."

Writing in Il Popolo d'Italia, Appelius observed that the United States was the sole world area where Britain still had good cards to play, adding that in that area the "Axis has not gone to war, limiting itself to nonbelligerency."

Speaks of Dignity

"The Axis liberty of movement as regards the United States," he went on, "is limited by the categorical imperatives of the (Fascist-Nazi) revolution, which has its own dignity . . ."

Gayda, asserting that United States policy had gone on from "dollar imperialism" to a "political and military monopoly of positions and bases shown in ever vaster constellations around the starry republic," pictured that country as:

". . . preparing to lend another hand to the progressive destruction of the British Empire by constituting herself heiress to the positions and riches which formerly formed a part of British power."

Evaluating the American rearmament effort, he said the United States, since it was "floating in gold," could perform miracles in that connection.

"But there is a question," he declared, "whether the necessary national spirit such as has been created in Italy and Germany will accompany this military preparation."

Appelius indicated the situations regarding Spain and Russia and the self-imposed limitation of the Axis in its "nonbelligerency" toward the United States were among nine questions undoubtedly reviewed by Premier Mussolini and Fuehrer Hitler at their recent meeting in Brehner Pass.

Spain's Goal Defined

A disclosure, which was heightened by the conference between Hitler and Generalissimo Franco yesterday, was to the effect that Spain has three objectives—"Gibraltar, Africa and Spanishism" (Appelius' own coined word.)

The attack on the British Empire's lifeline was outlined at Brenner. Appelius said, in a vast plan which ties "together in a single pattern the destructive effects of war with the constructive ones of politics."

The plan, he said, was not merely to occupy the Suez Canal, "but to bring down the whole superstructure of the British Empire, expel England from the Orient and expel the English fleet from the eastern Mediterranean and Red Sea."

The alliance with Japan he described as the "lacing in of Brenner with Fujiyama." (Japan's sacred mountain.)

Since the Brenner conference, he added, the Fascist-Nazi revolution has been "completely won" in Rumania, has been gaining ground in Bulgaria, Hungary, has won new positions in the conquered nations of Norway, Holland, Belgium and France, and is "advancing in the minds" of Swedes, Swiss, Portuguese and Yugoslavs.

Three Here Win Oberlin Awards

Three Washington high school seniors won awards in the Twelfth Annual High School Day examinations conducted by the Oberlin College and Conservatory, it was announced yesterday.

Two Woodrow Wilson students, Ruth Cheney and Judith Chalmers, were among the winners. Miss Frances Walker, Dunbar High School pianist, was named an alternate for a tuition award in the conservatory of music.

Miss Cheney was awarded a full tuition scholarship in the college for 1941-42, while Miss Chalmers was named alternate for a similar scholarship.

Draft Boards Ordered to Post All D. C. Numbers Tomorrow

List Will Be on View in Quarters At District Schools; Historic Bowl Of 1917 Arrives for Tuesday Lottery

Twenty-four local draft boards yesterday were ordered to announce the serial numbers of 114,000 Washington selective service registrants by noon tomorrow.

The order was issued as the selection units neared completion of the numbering process—prelude to Tuesday's lottery which will determine which of the Nation's registrants are likely to be called first to serve.

A majority of the boards already have prepared the lists, which will be posted at the board headquarters in 24 local schools. Gen. Albert L. Cox, Capital selective service director, yesterday assigned additional clerks to staffs in several of the larger areas to assure their completion of the task before the Saturday dead-line.

Heaviest Washington registration was in the thirteenth area, whose board headquarters are at the Henry School, Seventh and P Streets Northwest. Approximately 7,500 serial numbers will be announced in this district, the remainder of an original manpower inventory of 8,395 from which out-of-area cards from 48 States and other Washington precincts were eliminated.

On the basis of tabulations so far received at national headquarters the large Capital board is among those with greatest registration throughout the country. A Florida district leads with 9,200 registrants.

Enough numbers, from one upward, will be drawn in the lottery to cover the largest number of registrants in any one area in the country.

Meanwhile a glass bowl, swathed in chamois, enclosed in a cardboard box, and convoyed by 18 specially picked policemen, arrived at national selective service headquarters here.

Raises Dispute

The frail container was turned over to national Director Clarence A. Dykstra in a ceremony befitting its World War vintage—but simultaneously touched off a dispute as to its origin. Historians questioned that it was the famed "goldfish bowl" used by Secretary of War Baker for the first drawing in 1917.

Some opinion, bulwarked by pictures of a different bowl used by the World War Army head, suggested last night that the bowl was not the one used in the original lottery of 1917, but one used by President Wilson, September 30, 1918.

Dykstra, meanwhile, indicated he was unperturbed by the controversy.

First hand indorsement of two eye-witnesses to the No. 1 drawing in 1917 was forthcoming last night for at least one of the accoutrements for the 1940 lottery.

John P. Gilmore, secretary to Senator A. A. Jones, of New Mexico in the World War days, and Charles E. Alden, assistant custodian of the Senate for 35 years, moved a mahogany table out of a Senate committee room for its transfer to selective service headquarters along with the bowl. It is definitely the table used in the July 20, 1917 lottery, Gilmore asserted. "We were there," he added.

At the same time, national headquarters issued a statement stressing the wide discretionary powers given courts to protect selectives against financial loss through military service.

Courts may extend the time allowed for payment by trainees of judgments against them until three months after their completion of service, or for longer periods on the installment basis, it was pointed out.

Further, no man in military service may be sued unless he is represented in court by counsel and no judgment may be collected aganst him unless a bond is posted to indemnify him should the judgment be reversed after he has finished his year in the Army.

"Where an automobile, tractor, clothing, furniture or other personal property has been purchased under an installment or deferred payment contract prior to October 18, 1940, and the purchaser has entered military service . . . the property cannot be repossessed without a court order" it was stated.

War Plane Factories Ahead Of Schedule, Morgenthau Says

By the Associated Press

Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday that warplane production was "a number of days ahead of schedule" at the Curtiss factory in Buffalo, N. Y., where pursuit planes are being turned out for this country and Great Britain.

Morgenthau

The Treasury chief, at a press conference, declined to be more specific. A week ago he said the plant was turning out six ships a day.

He said that "in almost every instance," where planes were being made for the British, the plants were ahead of schedule, or at least on schedule.

"The English are very much pleased," he added.

The Secretary also read from a speech by Wendell L. Willkie at Chicago saying that "not even the most ardent New Dealer defends" the Administration's monetary policy.

"This ardent New Dealer cheerfully defends it," Morgenthau said.

The Treasury head then related depression incidents of 1932 and 1933, and asked whether Willkie "would have done nothing to stop that cruel spiral of deflation, or is he simply, on behalf of his associates, expressing again resentment of that fact that monetary control has been taken away from his friends in Wall Street?"

Aluminum Plant Shut Down by Walkout

East St. Louis, Ill., Oct. 24 (AP).—A strike, which a representative of the National Defense Commission had attempted to avert, shut down the plant of the Aluminum Ore Co. today.

Thirteen hundred production employes walked out following the company's rejection of a demand by the Aluminum Workers Union (A. F. L.) for a general wage increase of 2 to 5 cents an hour. Wage negotiations had been under way since last July 1.

Joseph Keenan, assistant to Sidney Hillman, labor's member of the Defense Commission, conferred for several weeks with company officers and union agents, but failed to break the deadlock.

The East St. Louis plant and another at Mobile, Ala., are considered vital defense units, as they produce almost all available aluminum oxide from bauxite ore, initial step in the manufacture of aluminum.

Trinidad Waits EagerlyComing Of the Yankees

Anchor for Chain Of Bases Already Surveyed for Airports

Gulf of Paria, large enough and deep enough to provide an anchorage for the fleets of both the United States and Great Britain, and they flew over Man o' War Bay outside the neighboring Island of Tobago, which is said to be the island that Daniel Defoe had in mind when he wrote Robinson Crusoe. Having finished with their flying, the naval men traveled by motor and on foot, looking for likely sites for an air field, for docks and for a storage depot for munitions and other supplies.

Maj. Gen. J. L. Devers and the Army men were equally busy, flying, motoring and tramping in quest of sites for air fields and supply depots.

Plan Submitted to President

Once the surveys were finished, the Army officers met with Rear Admiral Greenslade and worked out a comprehensive plan. This was submitted to His Excellency Maj. Sir Hubert Winthrop Young, K. C. M. G., D. S. O., Governor of Trinidad, who served with Lawrence of Arabia back in 1914. Sir Hubert then submitted the plan to Trinidad's executive council, which approved it just before the American mission sailed away on October 17.

By the time this appears, Admiral Greenslade and his colleagues probably will be back in Washington, where their plan is to be submitted to President Roosevelt.

If the same thing is done here that is now being done in Puerto Rico, and that seems both logical and likely, there will be two master air bases, one for the Navy and one for the Army. Then, for the Army, there will be several satellite or auxiliary fields.

Room Enough for Fleet

From this "Land of the Humming Bird," American war birds will range out over the Atlantic for as much as 1,000 miles, on guard against hostile warships or aircraft carriers.

Here, too, will be based naval patrol vessels with an even greater cruising radius. And always there will be the Gulf of Paria anchorage for the fleet or any part of it. In the months and years ahead, no doubt, much will be heard of America's men-o'-war shuttling from Cuba to Jamaica, and from Jamaica to Trinidad.

In building air fields here, the United States virtually will be starting from scratch. Therefore, a good deal of money, labor and time will be involved.

To the casual visitor, it would seem that Trinidad is not very well adapted for an aerial stronghold, so mountainous does it appear. However, British residents say that looks are deceiving, and they point out that there are many potential airdromes.

If Uncle Sam is willing to spend the money, he could fill in the Caroni Swamp, just east of Port-of-Spain, and make of it one of the outstanding airdromes in the world.

Task Is to Keep Enemy Out

American military men to whom The Post reporter has talked regard the outer defenses which are to stretch northward from here to Cuba as far more important than the defenses at the Panama Canal itself. The important thing is, they say, to keep an enemy out of the Caribbean altogether. For once he breaks through, once he gets within flying range, all the antiaircraft guns and all the fighter planes in the world are no guarantee against a bombing of the "Big Ditch" itself. That, they say, has been proved by what's going on in Europe.

And if anything happens to the Panama Canal, of course, it means a delay of at least three weeks in getting the fleet from one ocean to the other around Cape Horn.

The day is coming, some Army men will tell you, when great air fleets will move from base to base as warships now move from base to base. Hence, the importance of air bases and plenty of auxiliary fields, such as are now being constructed at Puerto Rico and such as some day will be constructed here.

Very Little "Weather"

Right now there are two places for landing planes at Trinidad, Cocorite and Piarco. Pan American Airways uses both. Cocorite for its flying boats, or "baby clippers," and Piarco for its luxurious new four-motored "stratoliners." You leave San Juan, Puerto Rico, in one of these—the Flying Cloud, maybe, or the Comet or the Rainbow—and you are in Port-of-Spain three hours and 25 minutes later, a journey of 574 miles through the substratosphere, traveling high above the clouds at an altitude of 16,000 feet.

At that height there is little "weather" to hinder the air liner as she sails southward on the second leg of her journey to Rio, the first leg having been from Miami to San Juan.

The plane lands on a 3,150-foot runway at Piarco, seven miles from the nearest mountain. Will this field, like Pan America's Isla Grande base at San Juan be taken over by Uncle Sam? you ask. The answer is no; Piarco is owned by the government of Trinidad. Uncle Sam will have to start from scratch.

Driver Has British Accent

After going through the customs, you get into an automobile provided by Pan American. The colored driver talks in a clipped British accent, and says, "Righto!"

You learn later that he, and virtually all the other natives, also talk patois, a language peculiar to the West Indies. It is a broken French with a little English and a little of this and that thrown in. Apparently the American expression of "Long time no see" was inspired by it.

On the way to the Queen's Park Hotel, the automobile, traveling on the left side of the road, as is customary in British colonies, moves over a smooth asphalt road. All the roads in Trinidad are good, you are told, and the reason is Trinidad's famous Pitch Lake, a source of asphalt that has paved streets in all parts of the world. Sir Walter Raleigh, looking for gold here, discovered Pitch Lake, and hastened to write Queen Elizabeth about it.

Much Oil in Trinidad

Through streets crowded with peoples of all hues—colored women carrying great bundles on their heads, Hindu women with saris and arms loaded with bracelets, Chinese ice cream peddlers—the automobile comes finally to Queen's Park Hotel, a handsome structure that looks out on a savannah or park where the soccer games are played.

In the lobby are two Texans who were first encountered ten days ago on the flight down from Miami to San Juan. They sell oil-well machinery, and have just been into the interior of Trinidad.

As is well known, Trinidad is one of the British Empire's most important producers of oil, and that is another reason why it has the makings of an ideal air and naval base.

How the United States reacted to the swap of American destroyers for bases in the British West Indies was thoroughly recorded by the American newspapers back in September. But what about the reaction of the islands, and particularly of Trinidad?

Deal Popular

Right after the swap was announced, the Trinidad Guardian made a survey, tapping sentiment in all groups. It got expressions from Sir Lennox O'Reilly, a colored man who was knighted for his brilliance as a barrister; Donald McBride, director of George F. Huggins & Co., Ltd., one of the wealthiest men on the island; R. Budri Ramkeesoon, a leader of the East Indian community, and Capt. A. A. Cipriani, mayor of Port-of-Spain, a man of Corsican descent, who distinguished himself in the World War, and others.

All welcomed the deal. They agreed that it would bring America and Britain closer together. They agreed that it would help Trinidad in a commercial sense and probably would revive the tourist traffic. And they further agreed that it would remove any threats to Trinidad in the present war.

But running through most of the statements was one emphatic reservation. Trinidad would welcome the Americans, yes, but it should be borne in mind that they would never be more than guests. As the Trinidad Guardian itself put the matter:

"They can never be more than guests, for our affections remain unalterably with the mother country, and we shall never own allegiance to any flag but the Union Jack."

The Hon. T. M. Kelshall, for many years deputy mayor of San Fernando, second largest town on the island, hailed the get-together between the United States and Britain.

"The Eagle's wings are very wide and will furnish us a good air-raid shelter," he said.

"There is going to be great economic benefit to this colony as well, because when America does anything she does it thoroughly. She is either going to spend a lot of money or none at all.

"Behind this there must have been some understanding between Britain and America that is not declared. It looks like an implied declaration of war by America against Germany.

"The only fear that people might have is that America might want to take over hte West Indies. I do not believe Britain is going to allow that. The only way America will take over the West Indies. I do not Britain goes under, and while I do not wish to be an American citizen, I would prefer it a thousand times to being under Hitler."

Russia Offered Bribe

By International News Service

Germany was reported yesterday to have offered Russia all of Asiatic Turkey as a reward for keeping hands off while the Axis armies smash across the Dardanelles toward Britain's Iranian oil fields and the Suez Canal.

Diplomatic sources in Washington understood the Russians were awaiting developments resulting from Chancellor Hitler's talks with the French and Spanish chiefs of state before deciding whether to aid Turkey or passively assist the Axis in wiping it off the map.

One reported object of Hitler's meetings with French Chief of State Petain and Spanish Generalissimo Franco was to range the French and Spanish navies beside the Italian to hold the British Mediterranean fleet at the western end of that sea and in the South Atlantic, while the Axis' land forces stormed across the Dardanelles.

Army Air Corps Is Reorganized

provided with 12,800 planes of all classes and types, plus a small reserve, and plus planes needed for basic and advanced flying training. They are part of the 18,000 planes on the aviation expansion program already contracted for or received. This program is scheduled to be completed late in 1942, but Air Corps officers said today they expected the 12,800 airplanes necessary to equip the reorganized Air Corps to be completed earlier.

The reorganization calls for an increase in annual output of trained pilots from 7,000 to 12,000. Enlisted Air Corps personnel is to be increased from 45,000 to 163,000. The Air Corps must increase its technical training facilities also to provide trained personnel.

From the organizational standpoint, the most important change announced yesterday is the subdivision of the corps into four air districts, each to be under the command of a major general. These are the Northeast, Southeast, Northwest and Southwest districts.

"The purpose of the creation of the air districts is to effect decentralization of training and inspection duties of the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, and to provide the commanders and staffs for spuch special task forces as may be required for operation in war," said today's announcement.

The commanding general, G. H. Q. air force, now Maj. Gen. Delos C. Emmons, commands all these units.

The territory of continental United States will be covered in these districts as follows:

The Northeast Air District, with headquarters at Hartford, Conn., contains the following States or other territory: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, that portion of North Carolina north and east of the line: South Boston, Va.—Cape Lookout, North Carolina, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Southeast Air District, with headquarters at Tampa, Fla., is composed of the following States: North Carolina (except that portion attached to the Northeast Air District), South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas.

The Northwest Air District, with headquarters at Fort George Wright, Spokane, Wash., embraces Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas.

The Southwest Air District, with headquarters at Riverside, Calif., includes California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma.

"This mighty mobile fighting force," said the War Department announcement, "will be so organized as to permit efficient operation by the whole or any specially organized portion in the defense of any theater of the Western Hemisphere.

Congress Sets PeacetimeHigh For Spending

Total Appropriations And Authorizations Reach $23,135,740,635

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

The present session of Congress has appropriated and authorized the expenditure of more money than any other peacetime session in history, Chairman Taylor of the House Appropriations Committee said yesterday.

Releasing an analysis of appropriations and contract authorizations of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, Taylor showed a grand total of $23,135,740,635.15. Of this, $19,069,548,775.15 consists of appropriations (including trust funds and interest on the public debt); and $4,066,191,860 represents specific authority to enter into contracts subject to future appropriations—nearly all for national defense.

The largest expenditure session in American history was the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress (November, 1917-December, 1918), totaling $36,119,536,082 for both appropriations and authorizations. The first session of the same Congress was also in wartime (April-October, 1917), but its appropriations and authorizations were only $19,384,215,694—some $4,000,000,000 less than this year.

Defense Represents Over 56%

"The amount for national defense and enforcement of neutrality represents 56.6+ per cent of the total chargeable to general revenues, and the amount for all other functions of Government represents 43.3+ per cent," said Representative Taylor.

The appropriation figures are $9,114,345,921.58 for national defense and neutrality and $8,982,084,801.28 for all other functions of the Government chargeable to general revenue—totaling $18,096,430,722.86. The balance is made up chiefly of appropriations for various trust funds and for permanent annual expenditures, such as interest on public debt, to bring the total to $19,069,548,775.15.

The total appropriations, said Representative Taylor, are "$641,519,461.24 in excess of the formally presented budget estimates." Parity payments, removal of surplus agricultural commodities, the CCC and military purposes accounted for the bulk of the increases, but they were to some extent offset by reductions in budget estimates.

15 Major Categories Listed

Breaking down the appropriations of this session "according to major purposes," Taylor declared:

"I challenge those who criticize the total appropriations of the session to take this table and indicate to their constituents and other American people which of the 15 major categories of outlay they would eliminate."

Among the 15 categories, Taylor noted national defense, $9,114,345,921.58; aid to agriculture, outside regular departmental appropriations, $1,091,360,950; interest on the public debt, $1,100,000,000; Veterans' Administration, $577,840,544; relief, including WPA, NYA, CCC and FSA, $1,489,120,357; general public works, except for national defense and relief, $450,177,050; Social Security Act, $445,044,500; Railroad Retirement Act, $122,600,000; grants and payments to States and the District, $65,995,083; Postal Service, $833,843,084.05 (of which $780,000,000 is chargeable to postal revenues).

In a special set of national defense figures, Taylor lumped appropriations and contract authorizations together, to give a total of $13,106,227,930.58. However, "long-range commitments" for the two-ocean Navy (which are not included in the other totals) would bring this figure to an estimated $17,692,227,930.58.

White House Denies Report Kennedy Intends to Resign

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 24.—Pan-American Airways said today that the clipper which will bring Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy from Lisbon to New York has been delayed by bad weather. Tentative plans call for the ship to reach here at 1:45 p. m., Eastern standard time, Saturday.

In Washington, Stephen Early, Presidential secretary, said Kennedy was returning home for consultation and that President Roosevelt "has emphasized the difference between that and resignation."

He stood on that answer when reporters inquired whether Kennedy would return to his post in England.

Asked about reports that the Ambassador had told Mr. Roosevelt he would not return to London, Early replied:

"That is news to me, and I think I am fully informed and up to date on it."

(The New York Post said Tuesday Kennedy had advised Mr. Roosevelt he would not return to London and that he would make public his reasons. Further, the Post said Kennedy has resented what he believed to be the President's disregard of his views.)

(Kennedy reached Lisbon yesterday from London.)

Tokyo Denies Pact Is Near With Russia

By the United Press

Moscow, Oct. 24.—A Russo-Japanese nonaggression treaty, preliminary to a broad general accord between the two powers, probably will be signed shortly, diplomatic observers predicted tonight.

The conclusion of a Russo-Japanese nonaggression treaty, it was pointed out, will not represent a change in Soviet foreign policy inasmuch as the Kremlin long ago proposed such a pact with Tokyo along lines similar to Russia's nonaggression treaties with many other countries including Germany and Italy.

Pact With Wang Seen

San Francisco, Oct. 24 (AP).—Kensuke Horinouchi, recalled Japanese Ambassador to the United States, said today he was informed that an understanding, or an accord, was about to be completed between Japan and the Wang Ching-wei regime in Nanking, China.

(Reports from Tokyo today also indicated progress along this line and stated that Gen. Nobuguki Abe, former Japanese premier, now special envoy to China, had reached an understanding with the Japanese-dominated Wang regime.)

Horinouchi explained recognition of the Wang administration had been withheld until it demonstrated that it could "maintain order and administer government affairs."

Peace 'Feelers' Reported

Tokyo, Oct. 24 (AP).—Neutral representatives have extended feelers directed toward negotiating a peace in the three-year-old Japanese conflict with China, apparently well grounded reports said today.

Influential Chinese unconnected with either the Chungking (Chinese Nationalist) or the Nanking (Japanese sponsored) regimes were understood to have contacted Japanese first in Hongkong and later in Tokyo to sound the possibilities of ending the conflict.

Raid Shelters Hit as Germans BombMidlands

By the Associated Press

London (Friday), Oct. 25.—German warplanes, in heavy squadrons, violently assaulted the industrial midlands last night and in one town in that area two public air-raid shelters were hit by bombs.

An Associated Press correspondent reported from the scene that the loss of life was "comparatively small, considering the hour of night at which the raid was made."

A motion picture house and a theater were among the buildings hit, and fire bombs of a new type were loosed upon the town, one of them falling upon a large drugstore.

Business and commercial properties were damaged.

Here in London the all-clear sounded early this morning after an attack during which the Germans had come over in greater numbers than for the past several nights.

But the respite was only a brief one, for another alarm soon heralded the approach of new raiders.

The second alarm ended before 4:30 a. m. (10:30 p. m. Thursday, Eastern standard time) and the British Press Association said there were no serious casualties or damage.

Rescue squads worked strenuously in London to free a number of people caught in the debris left by falling bombs. There were some casualties.

Over the midlands the assault was particularly violent—heavier than here.

The Nazis began the night attack with small, irregular formations which maneuvered in calculated disorder, gliding down to loose their explosives and fleeing then in full-throttle from the rising barrage of the antiaircraft guns.

It was a resumption of the hit-and-run—almost always the least costly in men and machines to the invaders—in direct reversal to the order of yesterday's assault.

Prepare or Be Enslaved, U. S. Told at Forum

Speed Is Essence Of Modern Defense, Bullitt Declares

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 24.—Prominent speakers at the closing session of the tenth annual New York Herald Tribune Forum discussed today the ominous spread of war, and warned America to prepare quickly or face the slavery of the conquered.

"Modern wars are won and lost before they begin by the preparation of adequate forces of men and materials," said William C. Bullitt, Ambassador to France. "Speed and more speed in preparing our defenses is essential.

"The milestones on the road to enslavement by the Nazis are all marked with the words 'Too Late!' The feet of the Nazis are swift to shed blood. Ours must be swifter—or, in the end, ours will be the blood they shed."

That theme was echoed by other speakers, among them Rear Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, former commander of the United States Asiatic fleet; Dr. Hu Shih, Chinese Ambassador to the United States; Angus L. MacDonald, Canadian defense minister for naval affairs; Richard O. Casey, Australian Minister to the United States, and Anthony J. Dimond, Alaskan Delegate to Congress.

Dimond said control of Alaska was the key to American Pacific defenses and a doorway to the interior of the United States. He urged a greater and faster development of Army and Navy bases there and the building of a road to connect it with the United States.

Casey predicted that in the event of British-American defensive collaboration in the Pacific "the very considerable strength which Australia has now brought together as part of her existing war effort ensures that ours would be no mean contribution to any joint effort in the southwestern Pacific."

Dr. Hu urged continued American help for Britain and China and concluded:

"When the war is won—as I am sure it will be won—you must actively participate in making and maintaining the peace so that there may be built up a new international structure with great organized power behind it to make the world safe for democracy—safe for humanity to live in. Without America, the task will surely fail again."

Yarnell said that "there is only one solution to the present world situation, and that is the overthrow of the military despotisms, Germany, Italy and Japan, and the restoration of the government in those nations to men who understand honor and justice and who realize that war and conquest will only bring misery to their own people."

"There are such men in those nations," he added, "but today they are in prison, in exile or for obvious reasons remain silent."

Miss Dorothy Thompson said democracy can be saved only by democratic men and women and predicted that the world society of the future will develop in the English-speaking world.

"If it is only geography you would defend,' 'she said, "you will fail. . . . If the democratic method can be goaded into grasping the weapons of deceit, half truths, suppressions, overriding of honest opinion, unbridgeable differences, all of which are essential characteristics of totalitarianism, then the evil has achieved a victory, at the hands of the democracies themselves.

Text of Willkie's Talk in Akron on Collective Bargaining

Cooperation Called Necessity for 'Growing Economy'

By the Associated Press

Akron, Ohio, Oct. 24.—Following is the prepared text of a speech by Wendell L. Willkie tonight at Goodyear Hall:

Our goal is a secure, free Nation of independent citizens, fully employed.

Tonight I want to talk about something that will help us reach that goal. I want to discuss with you, very frankly, something we all talk about, but most of us do not understand—collective bargaining.

There are no two words in our modern speech which are given so much lip service, but which are so little understood. Yet, unless we do understand what they mean, we cannot accomplish the ends we seek to achieve by collective bargaining.

Jobs cannot be created for the 9,000,000 unemployed Americans unless there is a full understanding of collective bargainnig. But if we do understand, and use collective bargaining properly, then the standard of living will inevitably rise, and the prosperity and the independence of the farmer can be permanently restored.

Close Management

And if we do develop collective bargaining to the utmost, the farmer will have to greatly expand his production in order to satisfy the needs of the industrial worker. The consuming needs of the American people have not begun to be met. Effective cooperation, mutual understanding between the Government, labor, industry, and agriculture, depends in large part upon a full realization by all of us of the possibilities of collective bargaining.

One of the first basic principles of modern American life is the inevitable and close relationship between labor and management.

It has taken America many bitter and foolish years to learn that the relationship between labor and capital is like the relationship between the two arms of your body. The blood stream of each is common to both. Farsighted pioneers in the labor movement have known for generations that true collective bargaining between equals is one of the surest guarantees we have that democracy may be preserved.

Another basic factor in modern American life is the relationship between industry, which must include both the workers and management, and agriculture.

The simple, obvious, plain truth is that America is not divisible. It is one. And what hurts one, hurts all. What profits one, profits all.

Problem of Unemployment

The New Deal shows no evidence of knowing these things. No administration can lead America safely through the hazards of this war-torn world unless it fully understands that America is one.

Contrary to the New Deal theorists, government must understand life as it is, before government can work out plans for life as it ought to be.

One sordid, sorry fact of American life we must recognize at once is the fact that nearly nine million Americans are without jobs today. Many have been without jobs for years. Whatever brought about our present problem of unemployment, one thing is plain: The New Deal has not solved that problem after eight years of power.

And today, all that it offers to you is permanent unemployment on a gigantic scale.

In other words, after they have manipulated and mutilated the national credit, after they have doubled the national debt, the over-all result, the terrible overall result is that we are in the same critical position in 1940 that we have been in during the New Deal's two terms in office. Over 9,000,000 citizens are still without jobs, and millions of Americans are without a break, except the pleasure of the New Deal.

Principle Furthered

We must and we shall continue relief until every unemployed American has a job made available to him. Furthermore, we shall support labor in every social gain it has made. These gains, for which the New Deal claims credit, were achieved over a period of many years by farsighted labor leadership, by the sweat, the toil, and the agony of workers themselves.

The credit belongs primarily to labor. In the broader view, the social gains should not be regarded as something of importance only to the workers of our American society.

They are important gains, essential gains—to all Americans, to our whole way of life. Wise employers and workers alike know that the social gains made during the present century have helped to create an atmosphere in which harmonious employer and worker relations can be developed; have helped enormously to further the principle of collective bargaining.

AT HOME IN THE KITCHEN—Representative Margaret Chase Smith (Republican), of Maine, is equally at home in the kitchen as in the Chamber of the House. She finds relaxation in preparing her own dinner after a busy day at the Capitol

And when I speak of social gains, I mean social gains made both nationally and in the several States.

In most instances, the great record for progressive legislation has been made in States which had, at the time, Republican Governors and Legislatures.

The record of black reaction and failure to enact even the most elementary social legislation has been made in the States which have always been dominated by the party now in power.

Workmen's compensation acts, unemployment insurance, old age insurance, putting a ceiling on the number of hours a man or a woman might work, and putting a floor below which no employer can go in the amount of wages he pays—these are but a part of the social gains that must be considered today. They are a foundation on which we can, and from which we will expand our production, increase the number of jobs, and improve the standards of living of our people.

Better Housing

We shall not stop with the gains already made. We shall press forward toward the mark. The old age of all Americans must be made secure. Our Administration will aim to make old age a time of contentment and security; a time of rest and independence.

One of the most important contributions we want to make to American life is better housing. We intend to put the whole power of Government behind a drive to abolish the slums of our great cities, and to give decent housing to all our people both in the cities and on the farms.

America should be a land where there is no wrong side of the railroad tracks, and we will make it just that.

Such improvements in our life, such basic social reforms cannot be isolated from the other aims of our society. They are intimately interwoven with the other aims. Collective bargaining, considered in its broader sense, is a means of interweaving them. Collective bargaining educates our society to the need for those things. The attitudes of those who are gathered around the table to bargain collectively will be both more enlightened and more receptive.

I believe that it is only through collective bargaining in this broadest sense that we can keep faith with the half million young Americans who enter the mature life of American each year.

Hard Work for All

The New Deal's methods of keeping faith with these young people is to treat them as problem children whose only hope is a Government handout. American youth shall not be regarded as a surplus to be plowed under—into the muck of Fascist or Communist doctrine.

Young America wants a government that will, with their help, clear the road to productive opportunity for every American.

I offer them the chance—and I ask their help, their toil, and their sacrifice to get America back on the broad, strong road of increased production and jobs for all.

This is not an easy charge I lay upon them. It means hard work for all of us.

It means a return to the American proposition that if you want to get something done, you pitch in and do it.

The New Deal speaks of the right of collective bargaining as something that has been accomplished.

We know that isn't true. We do know that the National Labor Relations Act is on the statute books. But so are many thousands of other laws. That isn't enough. Laws to be effective must be accepted, and the task for the future is to educate labor and management to the possibilities inherent in collective bargaining.

The truth is the New Deal has done nothing—and it has said nothing—to indicate any understanding of the important fact that collective bargaining is more than a social gain for labor, nothing to show that it knows that collective bargaining is the very basis of further development and expansion of American industry under a democratic system.

Growing Economy

I think it is true to say that our great problem today as it affects not only labor but also the entire Nation, is to achieve strength and full protection, without sacrificing the individual liberties upon which this whole American system of life depends.

Collective bargaining is one of the solid supports of the whole concept of individual liberty in our modern industrial society.

Individual liberty cannot be maintained today except in a democracy.

Democracy cannot survive unless it is productive.

Unless we go on making more and more goods, unless we go on making more and more jobs, democracy cannot pull through.

You cannot have a growing economy except by understanding and cooperation between labor and management.

Understanding and cooperation can be achieved between management and labor only through collective bargaining by representatives of labor's own free choice.

Collective bargaining as conceived by the New Deal is not true collective bargaining. The New Deal concept is a reactionary concept.

The true purpose of collective bargaining is to achieve a coordination of effort by the American people and cooperation between them.

Other democracies have failed simply because their leadedrs de-

Record Vote Of 50,000,000 Is Indicated

Registry Figures Forecast 37 Out of 100 Will Cast Ballot

Heavy registrations throughout the country, particularly in the big cities, indicated today that a history-breaking popular vote of around 50,000,000 may be cast in the Presidential election next month.

A compilation of official and estimated registrations in each State disclosed a possible vote of 49,719,200, or about 37 for every 100 population.

This figure compares with an actual vote of 45,647,117 in the Roosevelt-Hoover election of 1932.

It is based on an analysis of voter-filings and other data showing 60,576,979 may be eligible to vote in the November 5 elections, or about 45 per cent of the total population of 131,409,881.

Comparison of the eligible vote four years ago with the actual vote cast revealed that from 15 to 20 per cent of those qualified remained away from the polls. In some southern States the stay-at-home vote ran as high as 50 per cent. This was taken into account in arriving at this year's estimated vote.

The Census Bureau estimates the number of "potential" voters this year at 80,528,000.

Gen. Johnson Sees War in 3d Term

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 24 (AP).—Gen. Hugh Johnson declared tonight that if President Roosevelt is reelected "war is certain and will come soon," and then predicted that Wendell L. Willkie would be elected President.

JOHNSON

In a radio broadcast sponsored by the New York section of the Democratic friends of Willkie, the newspaper columnist and former Administrator of the NRA asserted that "no act" of Mr. Roosevelt "in the past two years is inconsistent with a purpose of war."

"Regardless of words," Johnson added, "no act is wholly consistent with a purpose of peace."

Johnson said that a "tidal wave of popular sentiment . . . sweeping Mr. Willkie to victory is composed of three elements.

"One is a growing faith in the simple, homespun honesty of Mr. Willkie," Johnson asserted. "Another is a growing popular distrust and fear of the cleverness, slickness and guile of Mr. Roosevelt.

"This country yearns for what the whole world needs—a return to honesty, respect for the pledged word and faith in the promises by which men live."

Smith Says Willkie Never Sought Undeserved Favor

C. Roy Smith, former director of public utilities division of the Securities and Exchange Commission, declared yesterday that he had "found Mr. Willkie to be a forthright individual who never at any time sought any undeserved favors."

In a statement issued through the Republican National Committee, Smith said that while with the SEC he had "reluctantly directed a politically inspired investigation" of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, at that time headed by Mr. Willkie, and had found it was "one of the most ably managed and most successful of its kind."

The SEC followed this up with a statement that it assumed Smith's reference was to an investigation of charges that "The Georgia Power Co., subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, of which Mr. Willkie was president, made direct or indirect financial contributions" to political campaigns in Georgia.

Willkie Views Vary, LaGuardia Claims

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia declared tonight that Wendell Willkie "seemingly believes that anything goes in a campaign, that no responsibility attaches to a pledge, statement or promise."

LaGUARDIA

The Mayor devoted an address prepared for a Nation-wide radio broadcast to a series of quotations from Willkie's past speeches, interviews and articles.

Discussing mainly foreign policy, LaGuardia quoted Willkie as saying in Philadelphia on October 4 that "attack is closer than ever," and as saying in New York on October 8 that "the United States is not in danger of immediate attack."

In Seattle, on September 23, LaGuardia said, Willkie declared that "I stand for every one of the social gains that labor has made. I stand for the National Labor Relations Act and the right of free collective bargaining. I stand for minimum wages and maximum hours, and for legislation to enforce them."

On September 19, the Mayor added, Willkie had said in Los Angeles, "It is my considered opinion that labor has been the chief sufferer from the politics of the New Deal."

Roosevelt Threat Suspect's Trial To Be Speeded

As a matter of public policy, District Attorney Edward M. Curran said yesterday, the Government will seek speedy trial on the indictment charging Edward DeRoulhac Blount, 30, with threatening to kill President Roosevelt.

The criminal docket is in good condition," Curran said yesterday, "and it will be expedient to set the case down shortly, perhaps within a week, if Mr. Blount pleads guilty upon arraignment Friday, as it has been announced he will."

Roosevelt Backs Mine Safety Measure Asked by Lewis

Supports Measure On Eve of Speech By C.I.O. Chieftain

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday extended Administration support to the United Mine Workers' mine safety bill, one of John L. Lewis' minor points of grievance against the New Deal.

The gesture, as some interpreted it, came as the mine leader and C. I. O. chief prepared to address his largest radio audience tonight on his November election stand.

Lewis, recently reported leaning toward Willkie, declined comment on the White House action and maintained the air of mystery built up around tonight's radio pronouncement.

The mine inspection measure, while part of the Lewis legislative program, was viewed here as subordinate to Lewis' other reported complaints against the Administration, chief among which have been demends that no defense contracts be let with NLRB violators and that J. Warren Madden be reappointed chairman of the National Labor Relations Board.

Urges "Favorable Action"

Within 24 hours of Lewis' three-network broadcast, President Roosevelt wrote House Majority Leader McCormack that the mine inspection measure was an important step toward protection of men who risk life and health underground and should have "favorable action."

The bill has passed the Senate but was deadlocked in the House Mines Committee and a petition effort to force House action failed.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Labor Perkins told reporters yesterday that if the C. I. O. leader's radio speech tonight turned out to be an attack on the Administration, it would not greatly affect the votes of the working people. Miss Perkins said "the labor groups are pretty largely for President Roosevelt."

Duffy Assails Third Term

As G. O. P. leaders continued to woo labor support, the Republican National Committee released a statement by James M. Duffy, president of the National Brotherhood of Operative Potters, A. F. of L. affiliate, declaring labor looks "with deep concern and apprehension at the ambitions of a proven incompetent Administration to break the sacred traditions by seeking a third term."

Other political developments:

High ranking Democratic Congressional leaders, it was learned, favor sine-die adjournment of Congress early in November in the event President Roosevelt is reelected. Republican opposition to adjournment forced a series of three-day recesses in the campaign period.

Stephen T. Early, Presidential secretary, said Mr. Roosevelt has given no assurance to Gov. Stelle that he will visit Illinois before election day, although he wants to go there some time. Early did not definitely bar a preelection inspection trip to Illinois, but pointed out President Roosevelt's rule against moving too far "from base" because of the international situation.

Sees Roosevelt Upswing

Chairman Green, of the Senate Democratic campaign committee, declared that Roosevelt sentiment is now "on the upswing" and the President will be reelected. He charged that Wendell Willkie would be unable to "lead the majority of his own party" were he elected.

Twenty-four Senate Democratic regulars opened last-lap stump speaking tours for the third term, with four of their leaders, Senators Barkley, Byrnes, Connally and Hatch, converging on Willkie's home State, Indiana, for next week's campaign wind-up.

New Deal Economy Drifts That Way, He Says in Ohio

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 24.—Herbert Hoover asserted tonight that the New Deal is creating an economic system which drifts "down the road of national socialism."

HOOVER

The former President declared that his successor, Franklin D. Roosevelt, had obtained extraordinary powers which point to "an American breed of national socialism," that in the past seven years people's liberties had been shackled and that a third term would violate "an unwritten provision of our Constitution."

Urging the election of Wendell L. Willkie as President, Hoover, in his address prepared for a Republican rally in Columbus auditorium and broadcast nationally, viewed the third-term tradition as a check upon personal power which he said President Roosevelt had built "to a dangerous point in this republic."

"In building up these powers the independence of the Supreme Court, Congress and the local government has been degraded," Hoover said. "A political machine has been built which places all free elections in jeopardy. An economic system is being created which drifts steadily away from free men and free enterprise down the suicide road of national socialism.

"We Are Drifting Toward War"

"Under assumptions of personal power we are steadily drifting toward war. And one result of the use of these powers has been to stifle the restoration of productive employment and a prosperous agriculture and to involve the peace of the American people."

Hoover asserted that President Roosevelt, in his speech last night, "seemed to indicate that I was his opponent and that this still was the 1932 campaign."

"He is mistaken," the former President added. "I should think it would be ill-advised to raise memories of promises that won that campaign."

Referring to what he termed an "example of smearing or worse," Hoover quoted Mr. Roosevelt as saying that the leaders in 1932 were willing to let the people starve."

"The President denounces falsification," Hoover told his audience. "So do I."

Peacetime expansion of Presidential powers in the past seven years has exceeded any granted in the Nation's previous 160 years, said Hoover, who drew a parallel between New Deal activities and Europe's "one party" dictatorships.

Free Election Perilled, He Says

"A few days ago Mr. Roosevelt sought to dismiss all of this by the statement that 'no dictator ever dared to run the gantlet of a really free election.' Hoover added. "That is not the answer. The answer is that there can be no free election with such a political machine as the New Deal. Does any man believe that even today 10,000,000 householders are not tied to this party by other forces than pure reason?

"Do you want to give another four years to building up a single, undefeatable party? After four years more, then what? Does not the surrender of a third-term tradition lead to a political machine which can elect to a fourth term, or even a life term?"

Hoover charged that it was an "intellectual dishonesty" for the New Deal to contend that it represents liberalism.

"Mr. Roosevelt scarcely ever makes an address that he does not refer to 'we liberals,'" said Hoover.

"He summons all liberals to join him. Earl Browder and Harry Bridges were joiners for a long time. But you cannot be or make a liberal by just shouting 'liberal' and denouncing everybody else as 'reactionary.'

"One of the great triumps of true liberalism was the independence of the judiciary. Some appointments to the Supreme Court are about as liberal as Charles I and hanging Judge Jeffery.

"Another one of the triumphs of true liberalism was the independence of the legislative arm. This yes-yes manipulation of Congress has a counterpart in that great liberal, George III."

Hoover asserted "nobody will deny that the majority of Congress have been reduced to a rubber stamp," and added:

"You may think the President's power dive on the Supreme Court failed. It did not. We have seen the court weakened steadily with complaisant appointments. Who will say that the court now is as great a check upon the personal power of the President as it has always been in the past?"

New Deal Hurt Farmers, Says McNary

By the Associated Press

Kendallville, Ind., Oct. 24.—Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, carried his campign into Indiana today with the accusation that New Deal reciprocal trade agreements "have sold part of the farmers' domestic market down the river."

McNARY

Speaking at a northern Indiana rally, the Senator condemned the Roosevelt farm program as "negative" and said the Republican Party offered an "affirmative, hopeful blueprint."

He told the rally the trade agreements, "which, in reality, merely constitute a roundabout way of rewriting the tariff, have left the farmer unprotected against imports."

"The New Deal, committed to the Democratic free trade tradition—if to no other time-hallowed Democratic principle — portrays at every turn solicitude for the foreign farm producer.

"The United States, under the New Deal, is the only world trading country which consistently, as a matter of self-conscious policy, prefers the interests of foreign producers to those under its own flag."

The Vice Presidential candidate advocated "the development of new industries using farm produce" and declared the Department of Agriculture since 1933 "has resisted, ignored or neglected" this phase of agricultural assistance.

"For seven years, the Department of Agriculture has been neglecting these opportunities," he went on. "Its experts have been too busy with intricate regulations to restrict production and shackle the producer."

"The international bias of the New Deal," said Senator McNary, "has acted as a damper on its ambitious farm economists and other scientists. Research looking toward new crop uses has languished under the New Deal."

He reiterated that the G. O. P. does "not begrudge the benefit payments to the farmer," but added that "they fall far short of justice."

"We have something better. In the forward surge which the new Administration will produce for America, the farmer must not stay behind. It is the farmer's duty to sow, till and reap; our duty to find him markets."

Willkie Views Termed Paradoxical

By the United Press

Detroit, Oct. 24.—Henry A. Wallace, Democratic candidate for Vice President, asserted tonight that election of Wendell L. Willkie would weaken America's defenses.

Wallace declared that the United States "needs cool heads and steady hands" to pildt it through "the narrow path between the devil and the deep blue sea" in order not to "lose our independence to the dictators on one hand nor to fall into war on the other." The Republican Party, he charged, offers no security for the future of the Nation.

WALLACE

Wallace spoke at the Detroit Naval Armory after a swift campaign trip across Michigan which included a dozen stops.

Willkie, Wallace said, could not fulfill either his promise to make more jobs or build defenses against dictators.

"We cannot afford to give the wheel to the Republican candidate who in his campaign is already weaving from side to side, shouting for defense at one moment and promising not to fight the next," Wallace said. He described Willkie's efforts as "a desperate attempt to collect in one pocket the votes of those extremists who would like to fight the dictators, and in the other the votes of those extremists who want to surrender our country to their power."

Dictators, Wallace said, are willing to disregard Willkie's "cries of defiance because they want the United States to have an unsteady hand at the wheel." Work on behalf of dictators is being inadvertently done, he said, by well meaning citizens who are captured by propaganda and become centers of appeasement, confusion, and weakness "as, we are all sorry to see, our hero (Col. Charles A.) Lindbergh was taken in."

"The Republican leaders keep repeating that they know how to make jobs," he said. "In spite of the fact that when last they were in power, their prosperity crashed into the worst unemployment in our history, they still think that repeating the same disastrous experiment would be the best way to make jobs.

"The Republica leaders have never tried to understand why, contrary to all their predictions, this country has added nine million jobs to the pay roll since March of 1933. They have never tried to understand why our national income is $30,000,000,000 more than it was when they handed the Government to Mr. Roosevelt."

Third Term Called Blow to Americas

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 24 (AP).—United States Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, urged defeat of President Roosevelt's third-term candidacy tonight as a means to "advance the good neighbor policy, to fan the flame of free government in the republics of the Americas."

BURKE

In an address prepared for a "nonpartisan" rally sponsored by the Buffalo Willkie Club, the coauthor of Burke-Wadsworth conscription law, asserted that "one of the most serious problems" the Central and South American countries have encountered has been that a "self-annointed indispensable man has crushed all opposition, assumed complete control and perpetuated himself in office for years or for life."

"Patriots in all of those lands have turned their eyes in here toward the United States," he added. "Here was an example of a people strong enough to live their own lives under law rather than under the iron hand of an all-powerful and self-perpetuating dictator. Our example has been their answer to the propaganda of the totalitarian states of Europe."

Justice to Get Hatch Violations

By the Associated Press

Chairman Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, said yesterday the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee would "turn over to the Justice Department any apparent violations of the $3,000,000 limitation on expenditures imposed by the Hatch Act upon national campaigns this year."

BROWDER

Gillette said this announcement resulted from a telegraphed request by Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, author of the act, saying that supporters of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican nominee, apparently believed each of several organizations was entitled to the separate $3,000,000 limitation. Hatch added "such an interpretation would clearly defeat the purposes of this provision of the act."

In reply, Gillette said "all we can do is to try and learn the facts. Any apparent violation of law will be turned over to the Justice Department for action."

Gillette said the committee hoped to develop additional facts on the $3,000,000 limitation at a public hearing today by questioning representatives of six separate campaign groups.

Gillette said also that he had agreed to hear a protest in person this afternoon from Earl Browder, Communist Presidential nominee, in support of his campaign of "intimidation" of petition signers in New York.

Roosevelt Speech Called Aid to GOP

New York, Oct. 24.—The address by President Roosevelt Wednesday night at Philadelphia today was declared to have been an aid to the campaign of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican Presidential nominee, by Representative Martin, Republican national chairman.

MARTIN

Gov. Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota, chairman of the Republican advisory committee; Oren Root, jr., chairman of the Associated Willkie Clubs of America, and Samuel F. Pryor, jr., of Connecticut, Eastern Republican campaign manager, issued statements today agreeing with Martin in prediction of a Willkie victory November 5.

"The Roosevelt speech, if anything, helped along the Willkie trend," Martin told newspapermen. "There was nothing Mr. Roosevelt said in his speech last night which proved he was an indispensable man. He weakened rather than helped his case for a third term in violation of the American tradition."

Roosevelt Balked Chaos, Says McNutt

Philadelphia, Oct. 24 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security administrator, declared tonight that the election of President Roosevelt saved the Nation from revolution in 1932 and that the Republican Presidential candidate "knows" the New Deal has succeeded.

McNUTT

The former Indiana Governor and High Commissioner of the Philippines was principal speaker at the annual dinner of the Democratic $100 Club. His speech was broadcast nationally (N. B. C. blue). Edward J. Flynn, Democratic national chairman, and Ambassador William C. Bullittt were listed for extemporaneous talks.

Eight years ago, McNutt said in a prepared address, "it was only by the grace of the ballot and the fundamental good sense and intelligence of the American people that the smoldering fires of revolution were put out and a new patriotism and love of country reborn."

The country at that time was "just about to go under," he added. But President Roosevelt, the Security administrator asserted, led the Nation to a "spiritual rebirth."

Flynn Claims Parade of States

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn declared today that "you can start from New York and go clear around the rim of the Nation and give every single State to Roosevelt as far, at least, as Montana."

FLYNN

"We claim all of the Eastern Seaboard outside of New England, as well as the Southern States, the Pacific Coast and the far Northwest," he said, while making what he called "a slight venture in the field of prophecy" at a press conference.

Flynn also predicted President Roosevelt would carry Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut, the border States, Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

He said he was "willing to give Willkie a chance" of carrying one of the three big Midwest States—Illinois, Indiana or Ohio—but said this did not mean he was conceding a Republican victory there. He refused to divulge in which of the three States the Democrats might lose.

Speech Halted Willkie Trend, Says Ickes

Secretary Ickes said yesterday that President Roosevelt's address in Philadelphia Wednesday night had stopped the Willkie trend—"if there ever was a Willkie trend."

The Interior Department chief, at his press conference, also discussed pre-election polls, saying they amounted only to "crystal gazing" and should be "abolished by law."

"There used to be just lies, damn lies and statistics. Now we have political polls," he said.

Roosevelt 'Knows World'—Cudahy

Meriden, Conn., Oct. 24 (INS).—Reelection of President Roosevelt because he has "intimate knowledge of the world" was urged tonight by John Cudahy, Ambassador to Belgium.

CUDAHY

Cudahy declared that America needs a President who knows "the people of the world and must be aware of the approaches to different nations, the methods of chanceries, the history and tradition of nations."

He contended the American businessman "is not ordained . . . by virtue of his training to lead this country in government."

"The business of government," Cudahy said, "requires a training in statesmanship and that is an entirely different training from one in business."

The Political Arena

Senator Pepper Leaves Hospital Here For West Coast Stumping Tour

PEPPER

His first speech will be at Los Angeles tonight. He is to wind up the speaking engagements in time to vote at Tallahassee, Fla., his home town, November 5.

Pepper was discharged yesterday from Walter Reed Hospital, where he was confined three days with a severe cold.

Union Party Leader Backs Third Term

Thomas C. O'Brien, the Union Party's Vice Presidential candidate in 1936, announced today his support of a third term for President Roosevelt after a call at the White House.

O'Brien, who ran on a ticket headed by Representative William Lemke (Republican), of North Dakota, four years ago, is a regional counsel in Boston for the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

New Deal Practices 'Subterfuge,' Holt Says

Senator Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, asserted in the Senate yesterday that some "high officials" of the Administration were practicing subterfuge by "preaching peace while they are going to war."

He made the statement in commenting on the Army's purchase of the liner President Roosevelt to be used as a troop ship.

"I'd like to know if the Army is going to transport conscripts up the Mississippi with it," Holt said. "It is the subterfuge of just such actions as this that is putting fear in the hearts of the American people."

Wallace's Paper Prints 3d-Term 'Horror' Booklet

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 24 (AP).—A pamphlet entitled "The Third Term—Why Not?" circulated by the Associated Willkie Clubs caused some quiet chuckles in political circles here today.

The publication tells of a great and good President who died during his fourth term in office, leaving vast powers in the hands of a rascally Vice President.

The printing job, it developed, was done in the shop of Wallace's Farmer and Iowa Homestead, a farm magazine. Henry A. Wallace, the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, is editor on leave of absence.

Don Murphy, editor not on leave of absence, said the company's job printing department was "entirely nonpartisan."

Democratic Elector Quits Over 3d Term

Poplar Bluff, Mo., Oct. 24 (AP).—Ed L. Abingdon resigned today as a Democratic Presidential elector from the Tenth Missouri Congressional District. In a letter to the Democratic State chairman, he said he was "unalterably opposed to any man holding the office of President of the United States for three consecutive terms."

Abingdon, a banker, was chosen an elector at a district convention.

Text of Willkie's Reply to Roosevelt

President's Speech Called 'Strikingly Similar to Defense'

Harborcreek, Pa., Oct. 24.—The text of Wendell L. Willkie's broadcast today, as transcribed by the Associated Press, follows:

People of America: I had a very interesting half hour last night. I listened to the defense speech of the third-term candidate, that is the defense of his own Administration. It was strikingly similar to the defense system—the aerial, the naval, the military defense system—that he is building for these United States today.

It was either obsolete or on order. It was obsolete for the reason that it discussed the issues of the 1932 campaign. It was on order because it promised jobs to you and the right to work. There is no issue between the third-term candidate and myself about 1932.

I voted for and supported him in 1932. I believed in the Democratic platform of 1932. There is no issue between the third-term candidate and myself on the questions of old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, collective bargaining, laws which guarantee minimum wages and prohibit men working more than so many hours per week, or the elimination of child labor and the retention of Federal relief.

I am not alone for all these laws, but I advocate their improvement and reinforcement. The only issue in reference to these questions between the third-term candidate and myself is that I want to preserve these social gains. The only way these social gains can be preserved is by keeping this country financially solvent.

Statement Corrected

If we continue along the road of deficit financing, every year spending more than we take in, the end will be financial chaos, bankruptcy and inflation which will result in the loss of every social gain, as well as the loss of liberty.

In his discussion last night the third-term candidate spoke of falsification of the record. Many of the things he spoke of in connection with this I did not even recognize as having been said. There was one point he did, however, raise, and that was the reference to the Munich pact. He objects to the statement that he telephoned Hitler and his allies.

As soon as that statement was called to my attention I corrected it, contrary to the practice of the third-term candidate who never corrects any mistakes that he makes. As a matter of fact the third-term candidate didn't telephone Hitler—he telegraphed him. And just so that there will be no mistake, these are the dates: September 27, 1938, the third-term candidate telegraphed Hitler urging him to go through with the Munich conference and stating:

"Should you agree to a solution in this peaceful manner I am convinced that hundreds of millions throughout the world would recognize your action as an outstanding historic service to all humanity."

Those were the words of the third-term candidate telegraphed—not telephoned—to Hitler.

Contribution Doubted

The negotiations of which he speaks were held all right, and Senator Wagner and Secretary of War Woodring and the Democratic Party in New York expressed themselves as very proud of the results achieved at Munich by the third-term candidate.

But you know I have a feeling that Belgium, Holland, Poland and France may well doubt whether it was a contribution to humanity.

In the talk of last night, the third-term candidate spoke movingly of the fact that the Presidency is a most sacred trust, and not a commodity to be sold by high-pressure salesmanship.

I agree with him about this. Will he not join me in putting that thought firmly in the minds of Boss Flynn, Boss Hague and the Kelly-Nash machine of Chicago? Will he not tell them that the Presidency is such a sacred trust that they should not use the manipulations of machine politics in order to secure it for the third-term candidate?

I have a notion that they don't like the national advertising they have gotten in connection with their attempt—to dishonestly win this election.

A very interesting thing in connection with the talk of last night was this: Here is a man who is seeking to violate a tradition of 150 years standing, a tradition that has been upheld by every thoughtful leader in American public life, and yet he offered not one single argument as to why he should be permitted to violate that tradition.

Opposed the Legislation

I was also very much interested in his claims of accomplishment during his Administration. And one of those that he put particular stress upon was the matter of bank-deposit insurance.

As a matter of fact the third-term candidate opposed bank insurance when the legislation was passed. The Republican Senator, Arthur Vandenburg (Republican), of Michigan, was responsible for bank insurance. Just to show you how clear this is, Leo T. Crowley, appointed by the President as chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation wrote to Senator Vandenberg on February 15, 1934, after the passage of the bank insurance law as follows:

"I consider you to be the father of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act."

And Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency at that time, wrote to Senator Vandenberg:

"You have rendered a great service to the country in connection with the Banking Act."

And also addressing the Michigan Banker's Convention in June of 1934, L. E. Burdsall, general counsel of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, said of Senator Vandenberg:

"We are under obligation to Michigan for having sent to the Senate a gentleman who understood the necessity for putting banking insurance into effect at the earliest possible moment."

That man is Senator Vandenberg.

Debt of Gratitude

He is perhaps more responsible than any other individual for putting into the Banking Act of 1933 the provisions which made it possible to insure deposits in banks beginning last January. So we are under a debt of gratitude to him for his leadership.

The facts are, that Mr. Roosevelt himself was opposed to deposit insurance. In a letter that he wrote in 1932 he said, with reference to the Federal Government's guaranteeing deposits in all national banks:

"I believe that such action would be quite impossible."

Another interesting claim made by the third-term candidate was in connection with recent employment of men in armament industry. He boasted last night that in the month of August this year 400,000 men were added to private pay rolls and he tells us that in September another 500,000 went to work. That is good, but it is a tragedy that it took a war and the consequent demands for armaments to start our people back to work.

I'd like to give to you the third-term candidate's own description of that kind of employment. This is what he said in 1936. Listen to it very carefully:

"We know that vast armaments are rising on every side, and that the work of creating them employs men by the millions. It is natural, however, for us to conclude that such employment is false employment; that it builds no permanent structures and creates no consumer goods for the maintenance of a lasting prosperity."

False Employment

"We know that nations guilty of these follies inevitably face the day when either their weapons of destruction must be used against their neighbors or when an unsound economy like a house of cards will fall apart."

That's what the third-term candidate said about employment in armament industry in 1936, and in 1940 I agree with him.

And on another occasion, the third-term candidate told us that recovery that comes from armaments is fools' gold. I agree with him. And yet today he tries to justify his Administration on the basis of recent reemployment due to armaments, a false employment as he himself has told us.

Now I intend to build armaments, too, if you elect me President of the United States. That is exactly what I have been talking about from one end of the Nation to the other. The building of a national defense that is on hand and not on order.

But at the same time I want to stimulate our domestic economy so that when the defense program has been completed there will not be a deflation and unemployment of hundreds of thousands of men and financial chaos. If we do not stimulate our domestic economy, it is inevitable that the United States at the completion of this program will have one of the greatest panics in history.

It was also interesting to listen to what he had to say about recovery since 1932. Of course, you all recall that 1932 was the bottom of the depression. A fair comparison would be: What has happened in his seven years compared with the preceding seven years? He tells us for instance that the hourly wages of workers are up. That is good. But what about the 9,000,000 workers who have no jobs at all? He tells us that business profits are up. But what about the idle factories? It does the unemployed no good to tell them that we are better off than in 1932. A fair comparison would be to compare the record of the seven New Deal years with the seven years that preceded the New Deal—years which included three years of the worst depression this country has ever known. And when we make that comparison what have we found?

We find that the national income under the Administration of the third-term candidate is down 11 per cent; that industrial production is down 5 per cent; construction contracts down 50 per cent; farm income, including Government payments, down 20 per cent; industrial wages and salaries down 21 per cent; dividends down 32 per cent, and new corporate capital used to expand our industrial plants and provide jobs down 84 per cent.

I want the third-term candidate to stand on that record. However he may twist and turn and seek to justify his record by partial facts and incomplete comparisons, the history of his failure is written in the relief rolls of this country. No amount of words can cover up the fact that today more than 9,000,000 men are out of work.

The third-term candidate now tells us that he is determined in the next four years to make work for every man and woman in America a living fact.

Talks of Social Gains

Once again he gives us promises and not performance. He is going to do it in the next four years.

Why hasn't he done it in the past eight years, when he has been in complete control of Government; when he has had a majority in both Houses of Congress?

He tells us that he is going to provide work for every young man and woman in America, but his own Democratic National Committee tells us that no man now living, or who ever lived, can fulfill such a promise.

The third-term candidate talks about the social gains that have been made. They are good, but before you can become eligible for social security—before you can have unemployment insurance, before you can get the protection of the National Labor Relations Act, the Wages and Hour Law, you've got to have a job.

We believe in those social gains, but we go farther. We believe that all the workers of this country are entitled to a job so that they can participate with their fellow citizens in these social gains. An Administration that passes laws to provide for social security but which fails to put men back to work has done only half its job.

The other night when I was speaking in Chicago I put certain questions to the third-term candidate, none of which he answered last night. I want to put some of the same questions to him today. The Democratic platform of 1932 promised a drastic reduction of governmental expenses; it promised a Federal budget annually balanced, and the New Deal candidate accepted that pledge in his own words 100 per cent.

Debt Has Been Doubled

But not once in the eight years of his Administration has the Federal budget even approached a balance. The Government expenditures have been more than doubled.

The . . . debt has been doubled. More than $60,000,000,000 has been spent, two-fifths of all the money spent by the Federal Government since its founding over 150 years ago. And the number of employes on the Federal pay roll has been raised from 560,000 to more than 1,000,000. Now, third-term candidate, tell the American people whether Wendell Willkie falsified that part of the record.

Era of Bad Feeling

Simultaneously, labor has as its immediate interest, improvement in wages and working conditions so that its share of the national income may be secured.

But while labor and management are thus in competition on the surface of things, fundamentally there is a deep community of interests between them. For instance, it is to management's advantage to create high wages, and it is to labor's advantage that the business should operate at a profit.

Collective bargaining should be the process employed to make manifest the essential unity between labor and management, and to achieve for each an equitable participation in our democracy.

The New Deal has created bad blood between certain groups in industry and certain groups in labor. With the help of the leaders, both of labor and industry, I want to put an end to this era of bad feeling. I want to unify the spirit of America.

With the help of both, we cannot fail.

We shall seek to solve this crisis in Government leadership by bringing into the policy-making divisions of Government the leaders of labor, as well as the leaders of industry and agriculture.

We shall delegate to these understanding and competent men the great job of combining American ability into a great voluntary movement toward unity.

Ours shall be an all-American administration, all for America, and America for all.

Join with me in this crusade to bring the Government of the United States back to the people of the United States.

Willkie-McNary 'Stamp' Gets Letter a Free Ride in Mails

LETTER BEARING WILLKIE-McNARY "STAMP"

The Government got beat out of 3 cents and the Wilkie-McNary ticket got a free ride through the mails.

Philatelists gaped.

For riding through the mails, from the chute to the postman who rang the front doorbell, was a letter with a canceled "stamp," saying in bold purple letters "We Want Willkie" and topped by the words "Voice of America."

More, the canceled "stamp" bore pictures of Willkie and McNary.

Philatelists, shown this item—which was brought to The Post by the recipient—thumbed their catalogues to find some stamp which might so resemble the Willkie-McNary "stamp" as to bamboozle the man at the cancellation machine.

The Arbor Day stamp had two faces, but these were of children planting a tree, and the Stephen Collins Foster stamp at first blush gave somewhat the appearance of Willkie but it lacked McNary. Then the Graf Zeppelin stamp of 1930 has such big lettering as was on the Willkie-McNary stamp, but it offered little deception because it carried a dirigible instead of the faces of two candidates.

"It's against the law to put the picture of a living man on a postage stamp," the stamp collectors said, while agreeing that this thing was an item, anyhow.

Candidate Attacks 'Staggering' List Of Broken Promises

The Democratic platform of 1932 also promised a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards—I am quoting its language—but six weeks after taking office the third-term candidate suspended the gold standard.

In the autumn of 1933, he undertook a disastrous experiment with a commodity dollar. Even today he retains in his own hands the power to alter the value of the dollar at any moment. And the monetary policy of the Nation is officially stated to be on a 24-hour basis.

Mr. Third-Term Candidate, tell the people whether Wendell Willkie falsified that part of the record.

The third-term candidate when he was running for his first term said: "I propose to use this position of high responsibility to discuss up and down the country the duty of reducing taxes." And he said that nothing was more important than (and I am quoting his language)—"This covenant with the taxpayers of the country."

Conference Killed

But under his Administration the Federal tax burden has been trebled; taxes have been lifted to levels that have been exceeded only in one year during the World War.

Mr. Third-Term Candidate, tell the American people whether Wendell Willkie falsified that part of the record.

The Democratic platform in 1932 said: "We advocate an international economic conference desiring to restore international trade and facilitate exchange." But on July 3, 1933, the third-term candidate killed the London Economic Conference. He repudiated the program of stabilization which he himself had instructed our delegates to present.

And, in my judgment, by that act he contributed more to the fall of the democracies and the rise of the dictators than was performed by any single act of any government in the world.

It was the financial bankruptcy, chaos and degeneration that followed the collapse of that conference, where there was so much of hope of stabilization, that caused the beginning of the decline of the democracies and the rise of the dictatorships.

Last night, the third-term candidate, referring to the Democratic platform of 1940, quoted this language from that platform:

"We will not participate in foreign wars and we will not send our army, naval or air forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas except in cases of attack."

Critical Period

I hope, I hope sincerely, that that pledge made last night by the third-term candidate, based upon the 1940 platform of the Democratic Party, is remembered by him longer than he remembered the same pledge that he made with reference to the provisions of the Democratic platform of 1932.

If he does not remember it longer, then shortly our boys will be on the transports, sailing for some foreign shore.

People of America, we are in one of the most critical periods in history, certainly the most critical period for liberty.

The question is: Can the United States come through this period and remain free? I believe it can. I believe it can by making itself strong, by making itself strong not alone in the building of a Navy, an Army and an air force, but in building a very strong domestic economy.

We must also, in order to come through such a critical period as this, be united. . . . I am going about this country pleading, begging with the people, to make America safe—to make America productive, to build an adequate defense, and to become united.

I plead with you now to join in this crusade to bring that about in America. You have no hope of its accomplishment through an Administration whose record of broken promises and failures of perferomances are so staggering as to shock the good faith of the American people. I thank you.

Text of Willkie's Akron Speech

spaired of solving problems by the voluntary coordination cooperation of their people. The defeatism of their leaders resulted in abject surrender to Fascism.

Let us not, by perpetuating the New Deal in office, run the risk that our democracy shall likewise fail. Let us unite to make effective our democratic life.

Only a strong, fully armed nation can live in peace in today's world. It is not hard for a dictatorship to be strong in a military sense. But a democracy can be strong and fully armed only when the leaders of all the people cooperate in production.

Unless that is achieved through a unity of action that does not sacrifice the essentials of freedom, the democracy will collapse, because democracy and freedom are one and inseparable. And if democracy collapses here, the people will have lost the battle, with or without war.

Fortunately, both labor and management know that our democracy can stand only if the government has a broad understanding of the unity of interests of the various groups in the Nation.

Every realist knows that in spite of the unity of interest in America, there naturally arise specific conflicts in motives, conflicts in immediate interests between labor and management.

Both management and workers understand this.

Management, as the representative of ownership, has as its immediate concern the stability of business, profits, and property rights.

Thomas Challenges Willkie to Debate

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, today asked Wendell L. Willkie to debate with him at Elmira, N. Y., tomorrow when Willkie speaks there in a public park which the city barred Thomas from using on August 23.

"In the spirit of fair play and public discussion, I would suggest a debate in that park tomorrow, especially on your foreign policy, which is similar to and as dangerous as that of the President," Thomas said in a telegram to the Republican Presidential candidate.

Detroit News Urges Election of Willkie

Detroit, Oct. 24 (AP).—The politically independent Detroit News said in a front-page editorial today that "the present emergency demands election of a new President—Wendell L. Willkie."

The News, which supported no candidate in 1936, announced it believed in indorsements only in periods when an emergency existed and declared it believed the current campaign an "extreme emergency."

"The President's eight years have been marked by a deliberate exploitation of disunity," the editorial said.

Correct Constipation Before—Not After!

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of emergency relief. Why let yourself suffer those dull, lifeless days because of constipation, why bring on the need for emergency medicines, when there may be a far better way? That way is to KEEP regular by getting at the cause of the trouble.

If it's common constipation, due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, a pleasant, nutritious, ready-to-eat cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran—goes straight to the cause by supplying the "bulk" you need.

Eat this crunchy toasted cereal regularly, drink plenty of water, and see if you don't forget all about constipation. All-Bran is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

Unemployment Near End, Says Miss Perkins

Millions of Jobs Are Created as Business Continues Upswing

Secretary of Labor Perkins declared yesterday that the Administration has "very nearly broken the back" of the unemployment problem.

At the same time, Government economists told The Post that unpublished reports of business activity in mid-October show no slackening of the upswing that began in early summer.

Source of Miss Perkins' optimism about the job problem was a report on her desk showing that unemployment in nonagricultural industries in September was at an "exceptionally high level," following a gain of 600,000 jobs between August and September.

Moley Warns Rally Against 3d Term

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 24 (AP).—Raymond Moley, former adviser to the New Deal, said tonight that President Roosevelt had built so powerful a machine in eight years that "it has compelled Senators elected by sovereign States to stultify themselves in public."

MOLEY

In an address for delivery before a rally of "independent Willkie" supporters, Moley referred to the antithird-term resolution adopted by the United States Senate in 1928 and said that of the Democrats still in the Senate who voted for it, not one had declared against the President.

Moley, who read a list of names, said he did not mention "these men to deplore their weakness."

"I mention them," he said, "to prove that in eight years an executive had built so powerful a machine that it has . . . made them incapable of standing by their principles. This is the most frightening example of ruthless power in American history."

"Give the Executive the further power that this election involves and the Congress will bow before him like wheat before a storm."

W. Va. Absentee Vote Here May Be Challenged

12,000 Democrats In District Expected To Ballot in State

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

All of Washington's more than 12,000 absentee Democratic ballots expected to be cast in West Virginia may be challenged by Republicans November 5, it was learned at the Capitol yesterday.

Dissatisfied with the preliminary report of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee investigators, West Virginia Republicans were said by an authoritative source to be threatening to challenge unless the Senate committee makes a more thorough inquiry of charges that hundreds of bona fide Washingtonians are registered illegally in the State.

Chairman Gillette said the committee's formal statement released Wednesday constituted his personal opinion based on the report of investigators who made a cross-section study of Washington registrants. The inquiry is not concluded, he said, and the committee will make a complete report.

A small corps of West Virginia patronage employes at the Capitol meanwhile was feverishly engaged in rounding up registered voters to beat a Saturday night deadline.

An official of the West Virginia Democratic Club said that all requests for ballots must be mailed from Washington by Saturday midnight to be acknowledged prior to election.

He said that because of the confusion it is impossible to tell how many West Virginia residents of Washington are registered, but he estimated more than 12,000. Another source put the figure at 13,000.

The West Virginia Democratic Club has an absentee voters bureau at 219 First Street Northeast and another at the Raleigh Hotel.

Officials insisted that all Washingtonians registered in West Virginia are bona fide legal residents of the State and only "temporary" residents of the National Capital.

At least one bona fide Washingtonian who never lived in West Virginia is on the mailing list of the West Virginia Democratic Club of the District, it was disclosed.

Mrs. Grayson Waite, of 803 Decatur street northwest, showed The Post a postal card she received inviting her to vote by absentee ballot either at the Raleigh Hotel or 219 First Street Northeast.

"Come in person, telephone or write," the unsigned card stated. "Automobile service. Don't delay—Come or call today."

SELECTIVE SERVICE CALLS! Orchestra impressarios Sidney and Maurice Kafka of the Mayflower, Max Lowe of the Shoreham, Dave McWilliams of the Meyer Davis offices and Bill Strickland of the Willard Music Bureau, are surveying their flocks apprehensively. For it's certain that selective service will take heavy toll in dance and music bands. Rhythm playing is a young man's game, and almost all the band boys had to register. Most dance musicians are not the marrying kind, belong in Class 1 . . . However, there's talk that the "public confidence" clause may be applied to musicians on the ground that their work is helpful to public morale. This would place them in Class 2.

P. S.—Army officers should be warned that if they try to make buglers out of dance band trumpeters, they'll also have to appoint special squads to get the buglers up.

Cafe Caprice will celebrate both its second birthday and Halloween on October 31 with Bert Stevens and his new trio offering "Witching Hour" novelties. This means that you'll rate birthday cake and Halloween souvenirs on the same evening. Scrumptious! . . . Look out for Madrillon's Halloween party, too. It's always a four-star fiesta.

KAY-BRENDA-HEDY. Kay Laurel, beauteous new singer in the Metronome Room, looks like both Brenda Frazier and Hedy La Marr. She has a "way-deep-down" contralto, played with Mickey Rooney in "Our Gang" comedies when she was a little girl. Recently she was rediscovered by Hollywood's Mitchell Leisen, will probably return to pictures in a few months . . . There's also a new singing drummer in Metronome, Johnny Burke, snapped up by Maestro Grant Thompson on his recent trip to Manhattan.

ALOHA, ARTHUR. When Arthur Todd leaves the King Cole Room on November 2, he'll spend two weeks duck shooting on the Chesapeake before joining his new 13-man band, already booked for top spots in New York, Chicago and Detroit.

TUNES FRESH FROM THE OVEN. Pete Macias, of the Lounge Riviera, always lightning on the getaway, is already rolling out the tunes from Cole Porter's new "Panama Hattie." You'll surely go for "Give Me Another" Old Fashioned" and "I've Still Got My Health" . . . Remember Joan Whitney, the delightful young singer-composer who appeared in the Mayflower Lounge not long ago? She's written a pair of contagious tunes, "Gypsy Moon" and "So You're the One," now being played by Dick Koons' orchestra . . . Jean Cathon, the Gallic dynamo of La Salle Versailles, has combined a bunch of Western songs into something he calls "Mon Petit Buckaroo." No end funny. He's also doing Britain's splendid morale song, "There'll Always Be an England."

Jane Marlow, of the New Bavarian, recently determined to add a new violin solo to her repertoire every week. She astonished herself the first week by mastering three classics from Wienowski, Bohm and Wagner.

FELIPE DE FLORES, engaging young Latin emcee of the Troika, hails from Durango, Mexico, which also happens to be the home of Dolores Del Rio and Lupe Velez. Before coming to Los Estados Unidos, he was prominent on the Mexican stage and cinema, was a favorite subject for cigarette ads in the newspapers of Mexico City. You'll love the way he asks everyone at Troika to visit him at his hacienda. It would serve the muchacho right if some one took him up . . . Another intriguing international addition to Troika is Prince Akbar, who looks into the future as easily as you do through a window.

SAMMY RICHARDSON, Mayfair's triple-threat arranger-vocalist-saxist

TOPS IN TRICKS. The way that DeLloyd McKaye, of the Romany Room whistles without puckering her lips . . . That string of impersonations done by Del Rio's Don Rice. The patrons demanded so many the other eve that desperate Don shrieked, "Whadd'ye think I am? A production!" . . . The way that Maxine Moore, of Burt's Trans-Lux manages to look so illegally lovely and blossom fresh. But it's no trick, just natural . . . The incredible stunt of balancing on her elbows done three times a a day by Kitty Morrison at the Lotus . . . The way that Pall Mall Room patrons don't ride those hobby horses.

FACES AROUND PLACES. Cosmos Room. Two too-beautiful blondes, Meredith Howard, formerly of musical comedy, and Mrs. George Allen, wife of the ex-commissioner . . . Lounge Rivieral—Peggy Townsend in black with a big diamond clip listening to Maestro Pete Macias' account of how he nearly worked himself to death registering selects in Montgomery County . . . Hi Hat—Jack Straight, the happily named insurance exec, chatting with the Ambassador's Manager Russell Conn, very resplendent in fall tweeds . . . Casino Royal—A flock of the Capitol Theater's chic Rockettes having fun after their last show. Rainbow Room—Hundreds of people and we didn't know a one. Maestro Milton Davis says, "I've never seen so many new faces in the room as this fall. It shows that folks are pouring into Washington."

Gene Archer, handsome and husky singer of the Neptune Room and radio, believes in fortune tellers. A couple of years ago he expected to be married in a few weeks. A palmist told him the wedding bells wouldn't ring. In two days Gene received a note that put him in the torch carriers' corps.

ATMOSPHERIC CONDITIONS. The Harrington Tavern is always serene as an afternoon in the country . . . Hearty jollity reigns at the week-end parties at the Log Cabin near Silver Spring. (Bring your own or messenger service.) . . . If it weren't for Eileen George you'd think the Anchor Room was in the depths of a battle wagon . . . The Nightingale is the incarnation of everything that a big countryside dance spot ought to be. Informality any gayety are keyed to Rodd Raffell's 1941 rhythms.

"MERRIE MELODIE'S VOICE. The Gay Nineties will present Dick Leslie, the voice of the "Merrie Melodie" cartoons, as head of its floor revue tonight and Saturday. Leslie will emcee the show's group of vaudeville acts, also do Hollywood impersonations as well as recreate the "Merrie Melodie" voices so familiar to all movie goers. Maestro Al Oddone is verree happee about the Leslie act, said to be one of the most diverting ever presented hereabouts.

Former Senator Pepper Sees Peril to Courts in Third Term

By Irving Perlmeter
Associated Press Staff Writer

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Oct. 24.—George Wharton Pepper, former Republican Senator from Pennsylvania, charged today that a third term for President Roosevelt might wipe out all "impartiality in the courts."

He told the Association of National Advertisers here that the President chose jurists for their sympathy with his views, and had already named five of the nine Supreme Court judges, 36 of the 56 circuit judges and 79 of the 161 district Federal judges in the country.

"We might have at the end of another term," he said, "all judges owing their appointments to the same source, and if we have all judges of the same mind we will have something like the Reichstag or courts of Germany."

Pepper, speaking to the business group as representative of the outdoor advertising industry for which he is counsel also raised the question whether such Administration activities as the temporary national economic committee and the anti-trust investigations of the Justice Department were not being used as . . . "smoke screen for sinister purposes."

Expressing no personal opinion, he said many persons were worried whether or not the TNEC was not being used to shake the confidence of policyholders in insurance companies, in spite of what Pepper said was an apparently sincere intention of the agency's chairman, Senator O'Mahoney, to go no further than fact-finding.

The speaker also asked why much publicity had been given by the Justice Department to a proposed prosecution of the petroleum industry without serving a formal complaint on the industry itself so that it could note the specific charges against it.

Dr. George Gallup, conductor of sample polls, disclosed a survey which he said indicated that the "consumer movement" for regulation of standards in business products was not the "prairie fire it was a year ago, but still moving merrily along."

He said his polls also showed that an increasing proportion of the population believes that the truth standards of advertising have been bettered, but that a majority of the people are still mistaken in their ideas of the cost of advertising and the effect of such costs on the prices of products.

Grove Patterson, editor of the Toledo Blade, asserted that business must help preserve the freedom of the press if it hopes to save free enterprise from an attack by a "crippling bureaucracy."

The Ohio editor asked delegates at the convention of the Association of National Advertisers for a united fight against "common enemies" among "an ignorant bureaucracy that day by day lays down a barrage in a desperate effort to make us retreat toward an equalitarian destitution."

'No Wrong Side Of Track'—Willkie

organize a post of the American Legion.

Willkie told his listeners that unless freedom were kept alive in the United States "it may pass out for generations." Thus, he said, he believed he was performing one of the most important missions of the Century in seeking to preserve "this way of life."

In Firestone Hall, Mrs. Willkie was given a big bouquet of red roses as the audience sang "Let Me Call You Sweetheart."

Willkie was loudly cheered, but boos could be heard from a crowd outside.

In his talk tonight, Willkie declared there could not be a growing national economy "except by understanding and cooperation between labor and management."

Only through collective bargaining "in its broadest sense," Willkie asserted, can the Nation "keep faith with the half million young Americans who enter the mature life of America each year."

"The New Deal's method of keeping faith with these young people," he said, "is to treat them as problem children whose only hope is a Government handout. American youth shall not be regarded as a surplus to be plowed under—into the muck of Fascist or Communist doctrine."

Text of Roosevelt Forum Speech

In closing this forum on the subject, "Saving Democracy," I can think of no better text than the final words of the speech which Abraham Lincoln gave in Cooper Institute in New York City on February 27, 1860.

Lincoln was then speaking to an audience to whom he was a stranger. Represented in the audience, said the New York Tribune of that day, was the "intellect and moral culture" of the city. Lincoln warned them against the fear-mongers and the calamity howlers—the "appeasers" of that troubled time, who were numerous and influential. He said:

"Neither let us be slandered from our duty by false accusations against us, nor frightened from it by menaces of destruction to the Government, nor of dungeons to ourselves. Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it."

The American Answer

We do well to repeat Lincoln's declaration of faith today. It gives the right answer—the American answer—to the foreign propagandists who seek to divide us with their strategy of terror.

The repeaters of these slanders to our democracy, whether conscious disorganizers or unwitting dupes, seem to believe that if they tell us often enough that democracy is outworn and that we are decadent, we will begin to believe it ourselves, and we will immediately, obediently proceed to decay.

They have a strange conception of our national character.

They believe, for one thing, that we Americans must be "hybrid, mongrel and undynamic" (so we are called by the enemies of democracy) because so many races have been fused together in our national community.

They believe we have no common tradition.

Characteristic Terms

They believe that we are disunited and defenseless because we believe in free inquiry and free debate—because we argue with each other—because we engage in political campaigns—because we recognize the sacred right of the minority to disagree with the majority, and to express that disagreement, even loudly.

They believe that we are no match for a dictatorship in which uniformity is compulsory, in which each lives in terror of his neighbor and, worse still, of himself, because the dominant atmosphere is that of the concentration camp.

Despising democracy and not knowing our strength, those who have destroyed other free peoples deem the United States an "effete, denegerate democracy."

At first we dismissed this contempt with our traditional spirit of good humor. We are now replying to it in characteristically American terms. We are preparing for the defense of the two American continents, and of the oceans that are the highways of those continents. And we are doing so in a mood of determination, but unafraid and resolute in our will to peace.

We are aware that the dictators are quick to take advantage of the weakness of others.

Common Ideals

As to the humorless theory—that we are "hybrid and undynamic—mongrel and corrupt," and that, therefore, we can have no common tradition—let them look at most gatherings of Americans and study the common purpose that animates those gatherings. Let them look at any church sociable in any small town—at any fraternal convention, or meeting of doctors or mine workers—at any cheering section of any football game; let them look with especial attention at the crowds which will gather in and around every polling place on November fifth. Let them observe the unconquerable vitality of democracy. It is the very mingling of races dedicated to common ideals which creates and recreates our vitality.

In every representative American meeting there will be men and women and children with names like Jackson, and Lincoln and Isaac and Schultz and Stuyvesant and Olson and Kovacs and Satori and Jones and Smith. These varied Americans with varied backgrounds are all immigrants or the descendants of immigrants. All of them are inheritors of the same stalwart tradition—a tradition of unusual enterprise, of adventurousness, of courage "to pull up stakes and git moving." That has been the great compelling force in our history. Our continent, our hemisphere, has been populated by people who wanted a life better than the life they had previously known. They were willing to undergo all conceivable perils, all conceivable hardships, to achieve the better life. We are animated by this compelling force today. It is what makes us Americans.

The bold and adventurous men, of many racial origins, were united in their determination to build a system which guaranteed freedom—for themselves and for all future generations. They built a system in which government and people are one—a nation which is a partnership—and can continue to be a partnership.

That is our strength today.

The strength of every dictatorship depends upon the power of the one, almighty dictator—supported by a small, highly organized minority who call themselves the "elite."

We depend upon the power and allegiance of the 130,000,000 members of our national community from whom our Government's authority is derived and to whom our Government is forever responsible.

We gain in strength through progress, social, intellectual and scientific. The more we perfect means of human communication between all parts of our community, the more united we become. Just as I, as elected head of your Government, am privileged to talk to you over the radio, you talk to me. That is partnership. And it means that when, together, we make a decision, we act upon that decision as partners, and not in the inhuman manner of a capricious master toward his slaves.

Mighty Structure

The constant free flow of communication among us—enabling the free interchange of ideas—forms the very blood stream of our nation. It keeps the mind and the body of our democracy eternally vital, eternally young.

We see, across the waters, that system undergoing a fearful test. Never before has a whole, free people been put to such a test. Never before have the citizens of a democracy—men and women and little children — displayed such courage, such unity, such strength of purpose, under appalling attack. Their homes and their schools, their churches and their national shrines, are being destroyed. But there is one mighty structure more enduring than marble, more precious than all that man has built, and that is the structure of the democratic faith.

We have confidence in the ability of the democratic system which gives men dignity, to give them strength. We say with Lincoln: "Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it."

Byrnes to Take Stump In Willkie's 'Backyard'

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Democratic National Committee said today that Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, would speak in Elwood and Rushville, Ind., on October 28 and 29, respectively.

Elwood is the home of Republican Presidential Candidate Wendell L. Willkie and Rushville is the home of Mrs. Willkie.

Byrnes also will speak in Springfield, Mo., on October 30 and in Pittsburgh, November 1.

Roosevelt Attacks Alien Propaganda

comment last night on reports that the information gathered by the committee headed by Congressman Martin Dies (Democrat), of Texas, linked Zapp with a number of German diplomatic officers in a Nation-wide propaganda campaign.

The Justice Department order did not confine the investigation to Zapp, general manager of the news service, but said the probing would also extend to "other persons" who were not identified.

Whiting Willauer, criminal division attorney, was appointed by Jackson to head the investigation and was granted for the task all the powers of a Federal district attorney to conduct civil or criminal proceedings. Willauer received authority to initiate proceedings not only in Washington but in other jurisdictions as well. He was free to start today.

Mr. Roosevelt made no reference to the investigation of Transocean News Service, but his address to the Forum was a full-bodied attack on "foreign propagandists."

He accused them of terming the United States an "effete, degenerate democracy," and answered by enjoining them to "observe the unconquerable vitality of democracy."

He had full praise for the spirit of the British people. Without naming Great Britain, the Chief Executive said that "across the waters" the democratic system was undergoing "a fearful test."

"Never before have the citizens of a democracy—men and women and little children—displayed such courage, such unity, such strength of purpose," the President said.

Lincoln Quoted

Declaring that a "partnership" built in this country by immigrants of many racial origins is "our strength today," Mr. Roosevelt quoted from Abraham Lincoln to answer the charge that the United States is "hybrid, mongrel and undynamic."

"Let us have faith that right makes might," the President quoted Lincoln, "and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it."

The Justice Department charged its investigators to determine whether Zapp was guilty of violating the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938.

Zapp's registration statement, filed under the law with the State Department, lists him simply as the United States director of the Transocean agency and makes no mention of propagandist activities.

At Washington headquarters of the agency, described as a world-wide news service with headquarters in Berlin, Tom Davis said he handled Washington news for the service.

Davis said he sent the Transocean New York office a regular news report "like any other Washington bureau" and that he did not know what was done with it there.

The Transocean offices here, located in the National Press Building, were raided by Dies Committee agents, On August 28 the committee visited the New York offices of Transocean, 341 Madison Avenue.

Earlier in the day, Secretary Stimson, speaking to his press conference on the necessity for creating a home guard to replace Federalized National Guard units, said that perfection of sabotage techniques were one reason for proposing the formation of a home guard.

Hitler And Franco

The obscurity surrounding the recent discussions between Adolf Hitler and Pierre Laval, vice premier of the Vichy government, is matched by the cloud of uncertainty which hides from view the purpose and significance of the meeting between Gen. Franco and the German Fuehrer.

Spain has been a silent partner of the Axis ever since the Nationalists attained power in 1939. Four months ago the Madrid government replaced its professed policy of neutrality by one of "nonbelligerence." But thus far Spain has made no overt move to enter the war on the side of Germany and Italy.

There are practical reasons for this hesitation. The wounds of the civil war are far from being healed in Spain. The land is impoverished, the people hungry. Were Spain to enter the war, the immediate result would be the extension of the British blockade to that country and the consequent cessation of the dribble of supplies which still reach her. Nor are any gains which Spain might derive from participation in the war likely to compensate her for the costs of belligerency.

Spanish Morocco has been a liability, rather than an asset, to Spain and, without ample financial resources, any further territorial additions to the Spanish domain in North Africa would be valueless. And there is no certainty that Franco's partners would permit him full and unquestioned control of Gibraltar, should that citadel be taken from the British.

Spain's own wishes, however, may have little weight in determining her course. Franco is under great obligation to Hitler and Mussolini, and if they feel that the participation of Spain in the war against Britain is absolutely essential to an Axis victory, he may be forced to fall into line.

In any event, even if Spain continues formally to stay out of the war, the Hitler-Franco conversations suggest that a more active role for Spain as an Axis partner is in the cards. Certainly it is difficult to believe that Hitler would have gone to the trouble of seeking a personal conference with Franco unless he had assurance that Germany's interests would somehow be advanced thereby.

Defense Priorities

President Roosevelt's executive order creating a priorities board within the Defense Commission, with plenary power to see that Army and Navy contracts are given precedence over private or export orders, is wholly a precautionary measure.

Although the law giving the President authority to establish priorities went into effect on June 28, there has so far been no occasion to apply it. American industry has cooperated loyally and wholeheartedly in doing everything possible to further the defense program. And there is every indication that it will continue to do so.

Indeed, Donald M. Nelson, who has been named to head the division to determine the necessary priorities and to invoke them, has assured industry that no immediate change in the present methods assuring preference for Government orders is contemplated.

The wisdom of establishing a priorities board is undeniable. In the first place, policies governing the operation of the priorities system must be worked out so that each industry cooperating in the defense program will know just where it stands. Secondly, the board will be in a position to adjust differences between contractors when such differences can not be adjusted by the contractors themselves.

Concurrent with the establishment of this board, the Administration has made use of the authority vested in the President by the act of October 10 to requisition 110 military airplanes built or under construction for the Swedish government. This action followed a decision by the administrator of export control that the proposed transfer of these planes to Sweden would be contrary to the interests of our national defense. The planes are to be turned over to the Army Air Corps and used for advanced training.

This may seem to be harsh treatment for Sweden. But our own defense requirements demand first consideration.

Politics And Justice

Members of the President's Cabinet are usually chosen for their personal allegiance to the President as well as for the special talents which make them useful advisers and administrators. So it is not surprising when Cabinet members aid the President in a reelection campaign.

But unrestrained partisanship coming from some of those administrative officials is clearly out of place. Everyone would recognize, for example, the impropriety of a barnstorming political tour by the Secretary of State. The nature of his task, particularly in the present critical period, is such that he cannot afford to risk involvement of our international relations in partisan debate. The same ought to be true of the Attorney General, whose duty it is to enforce Federal law with strict impartiality.

In his radio address on Wednesday night, however, Attorney General Jackson was not even content to make a partisan plea for election of President Roosevelt for a third term. He went so far as to raise the issue of class distinctions and to misrepresent the viewpoint of Wendell Willkie to sustain his charges.

Mr. Jackson seems to make the dangerous assumption that support for President Roosevelt is synonymous with patriotism. "The magnificent response of the Nation to the national muster for defense training," he said, is a tribute to the President's leadership. He coupled that statement with a charge that Mr. Willkie "has lost any chance he ever had of unifying the American people."

This attempt to identify the loyalty of the people toward their country with the fortunes of one candidate would be a serious error on the part of any politician. When it comes from the head of the Department of Justice it is particularly deplorable. Mr. Jackson's type of appeal stands out in sorry contrast to the recent declaration by Alfred M. Landon. "Whoever is elected," said this former G. O. P. standard-bearer, "will be my President for the next four years."

To support his argument the Attorney General accuses Mr. Willkie of demanding "profits for his friends" from the national defense program. Then follows a grossly distorted account of Mr. Willkie's opposition to the Overton-Russell amendment to the conscription bill. Mr. Jackson describes that amendment as a "promise to end profiteering." Actually it would have given the President power to take permanent possession of the Nation's industries.

Mr. Jackson leaves the impression that the Republican candidate was alone in opposing the "drafting" of "greedy profiteers" and that he was later forced to change his viewpoint. The record clearly shows that Mr. Willkie never took such a stand. "I am wholly in favor of providing the Government," his statement of September 2 said, "with enough power to force a recalcitrant minority of the industrial community to cooperate with our defense program."

The fact is, moreover, that Congress rejected the Overton-Russell amendment. It was objectionable to the majority of legislators for the same reason that it was objectionable to Mr. Willkie. Congress adopted a milder formula which will permit compulsory leasing of plants from recalcitrant industrialists, without any attempt to take permanent possession of such facilities. And President Roosevelt further softened the effect of this amendment by requiring the National Defense Commission to examine all proposals to take over industrial plants before any action is taken.

Yet Mr. Jackson has attempted to twist this incident into an insinuation that Mr. Roosevelt's opponent is thinking of national defense "in terms of profits." There is ample reason for concern when such gross unfairness in public debate is manifested by the Cabinet member who presides over the Department of Justice.

Strange Interlude

From one extreme to the other the fortunes of war have buffeted four heroes of London's bomb-disposal squad whose fame spread around the world last month when they saved St. Paul's Cathedral from a time bomb which would have wrecked that edifice. So rapidly do events move in wartime that not only has St. Paul's been damaged by another bomb but also these heroes of its former rescue have come across tragically hard times. They have been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment at hard labor for stealing $3.25 worth of toilet articles from a bombed shop.

Several questions arise in connection with this bitterly ironic incident. One cannot help wondering how men with the courage of giants in the face of grave danger could in turn resort to petty thievery. It may be that, under such a severe nervous strain, a normal moral code comes to seem inconsequential.

One wonders, too, whether prison and hard labor may not seem like easy street after the work these men have been doing. Surely nothing could be harder labor than the perilous job which has been the daily lot of these "looters."

Tragic as the case of these soldiers may be, the British national viewpoint reflected in the magistrate's sentence should not be overlooked. "Looting by civilians is bad enough," he said, "but looting by soldiers is worse." It is this kind of daily maintenance of morals and morale, combined with the other type of spectacular courage, which has contributed so heavily to saving the British Empire thus far. A nation which can enforce a rigorous code of law and order even against its heroes is a long way from moral disintegration.

Washington's Loss

With the death of Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, the District has lost a man who was at the same time its ablest servant and its nonpolitical boss. He was, in a sense, a city manager of the municipal government, although he opposed the creation of such an executive position when the District reorganization bill was being drafted.

Maj. Donovan was an outstanding career man in a city government that has taken too little advantage of a career service. He served the District almost half a century and rose from the position of clerk to that of the city's principal departmental administrator.

His actual duties were much more extensive than his titles of auditor and budget officer implied. Commissioners came and went, but "the major" seemed to many District residents to be a permanent institution. Because of his vast store of information on District affairs, his advice was sought by both the Commissioners and members of Congress charged with the handling of District appropriations.

It was perhaps in his position as liaison officer between the District government and Congress that Maj. Donovan performed his most valuable service. Although his first interest always was the District, committee chairmen responsible for local appropriations bills almost invariably trusted his judgment and more frequently than not followed his recommendations.

Maj. Donovan, recognizing that legislation is a matter of compromise, usually supported measures which he believed could be enacted, instead of delaying all progress until ideal reforms could be written into law. Moreover, he always had his eye on expenditures and revenue, and he is entitled to a large measure of credit for keeping the local budget balanced.

The recent agreement of the Federal Budget Bureau to restrict its review of the District's budget estimates to matters in which the Federal Government has a direct interest was the last notable achievement of Maj. Donovan's career. It is particularly regrettable that he did not live to follow through the first budget so handled.

Realizing that it would take a big man to fill Maj. Donovan's shoes, the Commissioners have decided to separate his two offices and probably will appoint soon a new auditor and a new budget officer. This seems to be a wise adjustment. But they should also realize that the loss of Maj. Donovan makes more essential than before a proper reorganization of the District government.

Because of his familiarity with all of their varied functions, Maj. Donovan was able to keep a semblance of order in the hodgepodge of loosely-joined agencies that make up the District government. Without him, this centripetal force will be gone, and with it may go a good deal of whatever efficiency there has been in our outworn municipal machine.

Willkie has promised us a new world. We need one, all right. The present one isn't worth living in, unless you happen to be pretty much of a fool about living.

A philosopher says you can't hate a person whom you know well. Maybe not, but many persons are so cantankerous it wouldn't be worth the trouble to become well acquainted with them in order to avoid hating them.

An Old-Timer, The Oyster

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The oyster has been around a long time, if Dr. Logan Clendening is correctly informed. The oyster was an oyster, and content to be an oyster, as Langdon Smith so aptly put it, "when you were a tadpole and I was a fish in a Paleozoic time." If ambition ever knocked at his door, the only answer was "Not at home." And from Pithecanthropus down through the eons to 1940's cafe society, the oyster has been as well known on the other side of the railroad tracks as at Aspasia's teas, or the week ends of Horace's Sabine farm.

The epitome of the simple life, the oyster, turned loose after a brief infancy, finds himself a homestead, and there and then his voluntary wanderings are ended. Though winds blow and rains fall and beat upon his villa, there he stays until predatory man comes along. After that, it's anybody's guess.

The famished traveler who really discovered the oyster's possibilities has never been identified. All we know of him is what Jonathan Swift so truly observed: "He was a bold man that first ate an oyster." But as he gulped it down, mostly water, but with quotas of protein, fat, carbohydrates and salts, he smacked his lips, muttered, "A tasty morsel," hied him down to that reedy tarn and drove his flaked flint to the mammoth's heart.

In his unobtrusive way, the oyster has played quite a part in the cosmic drama.

Deliberation Before Choice

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a young man about to vote for the first time I realize, more than ever, the responsibility intrusted in me as a citizen: the great responsibility to use my vote as I honestly see best for the election of a man who will keep America a haven of free people. This is the whole people's responsibility, for we are supposed to have here a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." The people, of whom I represent a minute part, must select a man on November 5 who will protect them, and in this protection maintain their free institutions. It should be a deliberate choice; not one inspired by prejudice or arrived at in ignorance.

In making my choice I have been open-minded and have taken pains to hear the arguments of each side. I have not been influenced by silly sentimentality, or by political innuendo, I have paid little attention to resorts to personal vituperation by one candidate or by those who speak for the other candidate. Mine has been detached, open-minded analysis. This was my only way of making a choice, therefore, I am astonished to discover that few persons of my acquaintance use such a method in determining how to vote.

In fact they use no method, their minds are made up before the campaign begins, yes, before the conventions are held. I am disappointed to realize how lightly people are prone to regard their sacred vote, and how readily they accept a public official's record without examining it, and at the same time take for granted that he is possessed of untold virtues. Apparently they reason that because he now occupies our highest office, and has for the past seven years and more, he must, therefore, be infallible.

"He Doesn't Know"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Dorothy Thompson, in her article of October 18, uses the phrase "The fall of Roosevelt" at least three times. Have we come to this? Did we speak of the "fall" of Coolidge when he failed to win a second term? Did we speak of the "fall" of Hoover? Is the President a King or something (as the expression goes), who may fall from his throne? Why not say "The fall of the house of Roosevelt" and be done with it!

But it is the gist of her column that I especially wish to challenge—her contention that, since Hitler desires the defeat of the President, we should continue him in office. In the first place, her hypothesis is debatable; and in the second place, what is Hitler's judgment worth, anyway? He doesn't understand our periodical political game—our exciting, dramatic competition, in which everyone has a grand time letting off forensic steam, holding rallies, marching, shouting, singing, and generally whooping it up!

He doesn't know that when it is all over, we again settle down into being the most good-natured, kindly people in the world. He probably thinks our change of Administration means a political upheaval, as with England or France; and so will weaken our unity and power.

As a matter of fact, rather it is a wholesome, refreshing purge, that imbues the body politic with renewed courage, energy and determination to face and mold the future.

Of Dictators And Wars

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Candidate Willkie would doubtless agree that the present campaign is of vital importance to America, and if so every main argument used deserves attention.

In discussing the third-term tradition, which he says is not a tradition but a "principle" (whatever that means), Willkie said: 1, That Washington felt strongly that he must refuse a third term; 2, That he knew that power long continued will inevitably corrupt; which is evidently intended to imply that Washington denied himself a third term through love of liberty; 3, That a war was raging in Europe at the time; here Willkie clearly tries to convey the idea that Washington's renunciation was made in spite of an emergency which might have been an argument for a third term.

The statement and the two implications are totally and glaringly false. The proof is evident in Washington's Farewell Address. Washington speaks as if a third term was not a privilege but a duty, but urges that he be relieved from filling it because he had already spent most of his life in the service of his country. An additional reason for letting him off was that there was no longer any emergency.

We all have sufficient confidence in Mr. Willkie's honesty to believe that he did not misrepresent intentionally. Hence it is hard to avoid the suspicion that he never saw the Farewell Address. But it seems clear that he does not appreciate the danger of guessing at his history.

Willkie's quotation from Jefferson is more accurate. Jefferson, however, differed strongly from Washington in regard to the dangers both of long terms and of Federal power.

Far more serious than Willkie's misrepresentation of Washington is his repeated charge that President Roosevelt is dragging us toward war. This indictment reminds us of the emotional appeal of the isolationists a year ago, when they were playing Hitler's game, and no doubt is intended to affect the election rather than our foreign policy.

But where is the truth in it? In Roosevelt's acts? No. His policy has been less aggressive than Willkie's—and all honor to Willkie for that! The only thing the puzzled plain citizen can put his finger on as now "dragging" us to unwanted war is certain things which have been said, such as the "stab in the back" utterance. Certainly Willkie, along with some of his supporters, have, with self-complacent, superior sarcasm, harped on the idea of "talking rough and carrying a swagger stick."

Willkie is a brave man to stick his chin out that way, for his opponents can make him ridiculous, if they care to take the trouble. Can anyone seriously suppose that the dictators, in their large move for world dominion, are going to be influenced one way or the other because a normal outburst of the American conscience hurts their tender feelings? What do we care about the pep talks which they give to their followers? And as to the swagger stick, is the largest navy in the world nothing but a "fly-swatter"? To say nothing of our airplane production, already almost 1,000 a month, and gloriously increasing.

What the American people need is what the Nazis have and France did not have—a glowing enthusiasm for and belief in their country's cause. Whether an utterance furthers that is more important than whether it gratifies Hitler or Mussolini. Exaggerated defeatist disparagement of our power and prospects does not further it.

German Language

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like to take issue with the attitude of May G. Spahr, in her letter appearing in your column of October 19. Before elaborating, I would state that I am not concerned with Miss Spahr's suspicion that the use of German phrases on the part of columnists and radio commentators indicates "Fifth Column activities." This is patent nonsense, as is her statement that " . . . the use of alien terms . . . threatens the purity of the English language."

Such an expression of opinion, however, comprises more of a threat to democratic culture than all of the German phrases our impressionable columnists throw our way. We must not forget that the German language is the instrument of the German people; a people forced into war by their greedy rulers, suffering from the conflict equally with the people of England and France. If we condemn the German language, the next step is the condemnation of the people as a whole—and after that, the condemnation of every contribution, material and cultural, which they—and not their rulers—have created in the past.

If America is to remain the stronghold of democracy, her own people must take upon themselves the task of preserving tolerance; once it is abandoned we, too, will move in the same direction Nazi Germany took: first, bigoted nationalism—and then, fascism itself.

Third Terms In General

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his prompt radio response to Senator Hiram Johnson's antithird term speech, Senator Downey was guilty of several feeble points which actually added to the force and effectiveness of Johnson's argument.

The feeblest point of all—and his rebuttal would have been stronger for its omission—was that Senator Johnson had had more than three terms in the United States Senate.

This is one of the oldest forms of New Deal argument, and might be carried to ridiculous extremes by saying that a Representative would have to "break tradition" to equal a senator's tenure.

No comparison really exists. There was no objection to the system whereby Senators were elected in the first place. There's been none since; there's none now. This has never been an issue. A Senator is merely an infinitesimal part of a "great deliberative body," composed of men of near, some super, Presidential caliber who have made politics and government a career.

The Presidency is a lone wolf job. From the time of Washington on, views by Presidents on third terms—however this may now be twisted by power-mad New Dealers—have been condemnatory of the idea in speech and more so in action.

An Epoch

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Indeed today is an epoch in my life, when I realize that I have lived for more than half a century and have never until today sent a telegram to a public speaker or written a letter to the editor of a newspaper which I read every day.

Hiram Johnson has made a speech which will be talked about today and many long tomorrows.

For one to talk politics without having read Hiram Johnson's speech is an insult to one's friends and acquaintances.

The Post Impressionist

The Utilitarian

The young man in the gabardine suit paused in the middle of the bridge and looked back along the street in the direction from which he had come. It is a quarter where the houses once were handsome, but they are beginning, now, to show signs of that indifference for appearances which is one of the properties of age. The paint has peeled away from the window frames in the row of elderly red bricks halfway down the block, and in the front yards, behind the low iron fences, the grass is worn and bedraggled-looking.

Farther along the line, as you go east, the brass handrails of the great stone mansions have grown dull and tarnished, and the glass in the cellar windows is opaque with the dust of traffic. The section, nowadays, is given over mostly to rooming houses. But sometimes, especially at evening, the sensitive eye will catch, in the graceful line of a doorway or a splash of warm sunlight on mellow red brick, a trace of its one-time beauty and dignity, as elusive as the fragrance of the old-fashioned clematis vine that still blooms in a few of the back yards.

The bridge itself is of stone and spans the valley in one great leap. The young man in the gabardine suit, having finished his survey of the street, lighted a cigarette and rested his elbows on the solid parapet. Far down below, black and glistening in the gathering shadows, a little stream threaded its way noiselessly through the bed of the gorge.

Up the wooded slopes of the valley, as far as the eye could reach into the deep distance, the tops of the tall pines were transfigured by the amber light of evening. Above the dark housetops to the west a great crimson cloudbank hung like a Turkey carpet; behind it, left and right, the sky shaded off at last to delicate tints of lemon-yellow and lettuce-green.

The young man lingered, devoting himself to his cigarette with all the concentrated seriousness of the idler. It was an hour when most of the dwellers in the neighborhood were still at the dinner table, but he could see, not far away along the parapet, a couple standing, staring out like himself at the flamboyant sunset and the darkening valley of pines. Their heads were close together, the murmur of their voices came now and again to his ears. The girl, who was closest, was wearing a bright-colored smock of some summery material; of her companion all he could see was a pair of white shoes and a thick bush of dark hair.

The smoker finished his cigarette and flicked it absent-mindedly over the parapet, following it with his eyes until a current of air swept it into the dark stream below. But he did not move on at once; that unfortunate self-consciousness which the average American feels when loafing in public was perhaps overcome by the hypnotic combination of sunset and surroundings. There is something anesthetic about bridges; suspended thus above the earth, as though the solid stone on which he stands had taken wings, the faineant feels a kind of catalepsy stealing over him.

Possibly the young man in the gabardine suit felt like that; at any rate he did not move. Now and then, soft as faerie horns, the honk of an auto on the hidden road below floated up to him. He could hear, mellowed by distance, the clanging bells of the trolley cars as they swung around the circle three or four blocks away. Due east, above the chimneys, an orange moon began to glow like the butt of a great cigar. In the parlor of one of the boarding houses somebody was lazily fingering the keys of a piano; it reminded him, somehow, of the tinkling accompaniment at the old-fashioned neighborhood movie houses of his childhood.

Covertly, perhaps a little enviously, he stole a glance at the lovers. They were still leaning upon the parapet with their heads close together. While he looked, the girl turned her face in his direction, and he glanced quickly away.

He began to feel vaguely uncomfortable, almost as though he were trespassing. Lights were beginning to show in the windows of the rooming houses. Under the lamppost in the middle of the block a group of shrill-voiced children were organizing a game of Sheep, Sheep, Run.

After a little while he resumed his interrupted walk. Far off to the south and east, above the downtown buildings, dancing skysigns flickered their semaphoric advice.

As he drew close to the couple by the parapet he realized that his crepe-rubber soles kept them from hearing his approach. Despite a sensation of embarrassment at the prospect of breaking in on the confidences of lovers, he managed to keep from accelerating his pace. Out of the corner of his eye he could see the girl, chin in hand, looking dreamily up into the face of her companion. The latter stared thoughtfully out at the sea of pines, still touched with the last light of evening.

Just as he came abreast of the pair the solitary walker heard the man speak. His voice was wistful.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

On Hysteria

I AM SERIOUSLY perturbed about Gen. Johnson. The general is one of my favorite newspaper writers. He has long delighted me by his picturesque contributions to the American language. He has often, as has our colleague, Westbrook Pegler, inspired envy of a style that, handling adjectives sparely, brings out the fullness of the noun, and the immense striking power of the verb.

Once, too, he coined a new phrase a day. One never knew what to expect to find, hurtling through the air, and one never could guess against whom it might be directed. But of late the doughty general has been training the guns of his vocabulary from the ramparts of the World-Telegram upon one undefended room in the Herald Tribune. Hugh has gone to war, using all the weapons of the psychological blitzkrieg, against a lady whom he describes in "all words that begin with a 'B', as Alice in Wonderland would say. First she was Boadicea, then she was a "Breast-Beating Boadicea," and now she is a "Blood-Thirsty, Breast-Beating Boadicea." I wait with intellectual curiosity to see whether Hugh can think of any more alliterations. It's like "Particular People Prefer Pall Mall."

Blood seems to possess the fantasy of the general. The word appears twice in his Wednesday battle, his battle for Boadicea. He is, apparently, never going to lay down his arms until the lady lies, like her predecessor, dead in her tracks and bleeding from a thousand wounds. Boadicea is evidently the general's moral equivalent for war.

IT IS A RELATIVELY harmless equivalent for violence. Certainly, the general is less of a public nuisance in this form than he was in that brief and nightmarish time when, as the Goering of American industry, he was hurling dead cats and blitzkrieging pants-pressers and chicken dealers. Boadicea was not writing columns then, but those were the days when she was most seriously perturbed about the New Deal. Those were the days when her gratitude to the Supreme Court was highest, beeause that august body said, "Hughie, you can't do that."

Whereafter Hughie took to the press, making his typewriter, like the one in Chaplin's film, rattle like a machine gun.

But I am perturbed about the general. Hugh, if you aren't careful, you're going to burst a blood vessel, and My Day will then be spoiled.

I wish the general would straighten out his classical references. I got accustomed, for weeks, to being his Cassandra. There was a sort of lofty and elevated darkness about that role. A pale, tall figure on the Trojan walls, foretelling doom in noble strophes. Beloved of Apollo and endowed by him with the gift of prophecy, the truth of her vision earned her immortality.

In the Cassandra tale Apollo, who gave her the gift, was scorned by her, so he put the jinx on the public so they never believed her. It all came out the way she said it would, and the daughter of the last King of Troy was most foully done in for having been right.

WHILE HUGH WAS calling me Cassandra, I caught myself going around with a darkling air, and a brunette soul, cultivating an iambic pentameter style and wearing black dresses and a look of suffering.

And then one day I looked in the general's column, and, lo, I was a blonde.

Boadicea was certainly blonde, with long and Nordic hair. That's the first thing that makes the role hard. Whereas Cassandra was swathed in comfortable Grecian robes, the British gal wore a breastplate and a helmet. She was the female Custer who took a last stand. She also—and that makes the role even harder—had several blonde daughters, whom Nero's Vichy puppets ravished and killed. She took 'em out on a cart, and displayed them to inflame the softies who were all for appeasing the boys in power. It worked, but too late.

THE GENERAL embellishes these classical references with bits of psychoanalysis about the whipping lady. It seems that Cassandra (or Boadicea) is really consumed with fear. It is neither the gift of divination, nor yet patriotic indignation, that moves her (them) but an "emotional disease" called "acute fear." "The victim sweats, her breath comes fast, her nostrils dilate . . . she begins to babble."

There, there, general. It's all right, here's a nice cold towel. And don't you worry about Cassandicea. Those fumes in the air are not Cassadicea's breath. And she wouldn't hurt you for worlds.

Reversing the psychoanalysis, there are only two things that the classical ladies shared in common: Violent and untimely deaths. This is the fact about both of them that the general apparently relishes. This he shares. it would seem, with many in this remarkable campaign to reestablish order, do away with dictatorship and bring us a nice, comfortable, old-fashioned strong democracy; first, and to make it possible, some people must die, preferably violently. I gather this from my mail recently, some of which has had to be formally turned over to the police. It is a weird experience, not without humor, to be told that one is "emotional, blood-thirsty and hysterical," and therefore "we shall shortly attend to you." The letters sound to me, just a wee touch hysterical.

The charge of hysterical is usually uttered in a most hysterical voice. The faces I see in the papers, with their eyes bulging and their locks dripping, are the faces from which issue the warning against fear and hysteria—the while they tell us excitedly that we are shortly to be Soviet-ized. Apache dances are performed in public as illustration of Apache dances that are not performed at all. "This is the way they are," is hideously portrayed, but "they" remain in the realm of classical analogy. What is it all about?

You, general, are you preparing yourself for the role of Goebbels, since the Supreme Court squelched the Goering act? Or is it all just harmless fun?

Economic Landmark

By Ernest Lindley

The 1929 Level Topped

WITHOUT FANFARE the United States has passed another economic landmark: the 1929 level of per capita income.

This is the second important economic landmark the Nation has passed within the last year. The first was the 1929 level of total national income. This was reached in 1939, when our total national income was computed at $69,400,000,000. In dollars this was several billions below 1929. But the price level was substantially lower in 1939 than in 1929, so that each dollar in 1939 stood for more goods and services—more real income—than in 1929.

According to the calculations of the National Resources Planning Board, the national income of 1929 was the equivalent of $68,600,000,000 in 1939. On this basis, which is the correct method of making a comparison, our real national income in 1939 was slightly in excess of our real national income in 1929.

In the ten intervening years, however, our population had increased. While our national income had increased also, it had to be spread among more people. In terms of 1939 dollars, per capita income that year was $531, as against $564 in 1929.

NOW, according to the calculations of Government statisticians, we have attained again the record-breaking per capita income of 1929. They estimate that our national income is now running at the $76,000,000,000 rate—that is, if the present rate were to continue for a full year we would have a national income of $76,000,000,000. Prices have risen a little above the 1939 average. In terms of 1939 dollars, the $76,000,000,000 would be about $74,500,000,000. This, divided by a population figure of 131,800,000, would yield a per capita income of $565, which is a shade higher than the 1929 figure (translated into 1939 dollars).

On the average, we are all—every man, woman, and child—as well off as we were at the highest peak of our prosperity in the 1920s. Moreover, our national income is still rising. It should. The population of working age has increased more than the population as a whole. Technical and managerial improvements in industry and agriculture have increased our potential output per person.

We can push our national income much higher. And the leading private economists whose appraisals are published seem to be in nearly unanimous agreement with the Government economists that we will—regardless of the outcome of the election.

At any time other than the final stages of a Presidential campaign the surpassing of the 1929 level of real per capita income would be heralded as a notable achievement. Why the supporters of Willkie have not acclaimed it is self-evident. The main reason the Administration has not shouted about it from the housetops is that in its latest stages this forward movement has been due to rearmament. Moreover, the advance from here on will be propelled chiefly by rearmament. Government economists estimate that the national defense boom will reduce unemployment to a "normal" figure by late 1942 or early 1943.

THIS ECONOMIC advance, which already has carried us beyond 1929 in real income, cuts the ground from under Willkie's argument that he ought to be elected because the Roosevelt Administration cannot produce economic recovery.

Willkie himself realizes that, for in his Milwaukee speech he warned that the Administration would soon "begin to boast about the great business revival that they have caused." Pay no attention, he said in effect, for this is a business revival generated by Government spending, not a real recovery produced by the forces of private enterprise.

Of course this business revival is generated largely by Government spending. Does Willkie propose to stop Government spending on national defense? Any savings that can be made elsewhere in the Federal budget are small change—except as rising employment permits the reduction of expenditures on WPA.

Willkie must know that, whether or not he is elected, the business boom forecast for the next few years will be due chiefly to rearmament, not to private enterprise. In the face of the requirements of national defense, the kind of revival through private initiative about which he has talked so much has no reality. Indeed, it probably will be necessary to curb private enterprise so that national defense can have the right of way. Private industry will have to do without new machine tools for normal civilian production until we are tooled up to make weapons. Priorities are becoming necessary in the steel industry and may have to be spread to other industries temporarily.

ALL THIS is known to the businessmen connected with national defense. It ought to be known to Willkie—even though it does cut out the heart of one of his favorite campaign arguments.

Unless the national defense program is scuttled, there will be no opportunity during the next three years or so for testing Willkie's economic ideas—even if he is elected. The boom which Willkie now acknowledges we are experiencing—and which promises to go much farther—is due chiefly to rearmament. By 1944 Willkie's economic thesis might have some validity, just as it might have had in 1938. This year it is about as timely and realistic as would be a plank pledging us to join the League of Nations.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

A Hitler Decision

IT WOULD BE HARD to imagine a decision more hostile of the rights of individual Americans than one which was recently announced by the Supreme Court of California upholding the right of a labor union to picket an employer, to compel him to compel his employes to join the union. The vote was four to three in an action filed by 32 salesmen of an automobile company.

The salesmen represented that if the picketing were allowed to continue the employer would be forced to fire them. The majority opinion held that the salesmen had no right to adopt a bargaining agent of their own choice but must submit to the picketing union or sacrifice their jobs. This court is packed with ideological comrades of Gov. Olson, the lower-case Roosevelt of the West Coast.

The court did not discuss the possibility that the union, being a private organization and subject to no regulation by any public authority, might be governed by racketeers, dictatorial leaders or foreign enemies of the American Nation. No weight was given to the right of the individual to refrain from joining any private organization.

THE DECISION holds that a union picket and boycott to compel the employer to drive his men into its ranks, even though resistance to the boycott would be disastrous to the industry involved. The court went further in saying that the victims were not actually deprived of their jobs or the right to work by this process. The damage to them is "No more than presentation of a choice between leaving their present employer, either voluntarily or upon its demand, or joining the union."

The salesmen are not deprived of their jobs, but are merely given a choice between leaving those jobs or joining a private and irresponsible organization on any terms that the organization may prescribe. The right of the citizen to earn a living for himself and his family is subordinate to the political power of any racketeer holding a charter from the American Federation of Labor or any Muscovite conspirator in the communistic family of the California C. I. O. The sentence which I have quoted is the most cynical lie that I have read in many an hour's study of the mounting pile of brutal dishonesty produced by political judges and bureaucrats since the New Deal and its State subsidiaries began the drive to create a vast sub-government over all the workers in the country, with the power to tax at will and to inflict the economic death penalty on free men.

BY THIS DECISION the employer is given his choice between economic ruin—which, of course, he will not accept—and coercing his employes in their selection of a bargaining agent. The California Supreme Court, by a leering evasion, holds that this is not compulsion on either the employer or the unwilling employes. The employer may accept ruin, go out of business and dismiss his employes for lack or work, and the rights of all are preserved. Or, out of respect for the rights of the racket of the Communist Party, he may submit to the union's demands and give the workers their choice between discharge and union membership.

In fact, although the court does not deal with this phase, the union is not even required to admit the employes to membership. It may bar them perpetually for antiunion activity in crossing its picket lines.

It may defer their admission for a period of months or years as punishment for violating the rules of an organization of which they were not members. Or it may simply reject them because its rolls are full and, even if they be admitted to membership, they may still be deprived of their jobs and placed at the bottom of the hiring list, while union members who have paid bribes to the officials receive the work.

THIS DECISION hastens the showdown between the rights of the American citizens and the coercive political power of irresponsible, predatory and often criminal or disloyal organizations.

If sustained by the United States Supreme Court it will abolish not only the rights of individuals and minorities to make their own bargains but their rights to the profits of their own labor in favor of private organizations having no responsibility to any branch of the Federal or State Government. If that comes the next step must be Government control of unions, with the power to forbid strikes and fix wages and hours arbitrarily, accompanied by the power to enforce the Government's terms on all employers.

That is the method of Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini.

Twitchell For Willkie

"First of all," said Elmer in giving his reasons, "let me say that I don't hate Roosevelt, that I don't think he is a villain and that I don't deny him credit for some good tries. He rates credit for plenty of overdue reforms. But I want to bow him out because:

1—He has become too cocksure that he has all the right answers and too deeply sunk in his own opinions to be reached even by professional divers.

2—He has done so much to encourage class hatred that whenever I lose 40 cents at bingo I get so sore I want to burn all the prizes and shoot up the proprietor.

3—I am a little weary of the phrase "You and I know," especially because I know he knows I don't know what he knows.

4—I can never be convinced that the moths should hate a fur coat because it hasn't fur on both sides.

5—I don't believe a man in a deep hole can get out if he is kept supplied with shovels, diving bells and radio talks.

6—I never heard of an auto, going downhill without brakes, being made safe for everybody aboard if you put your trust in high-test gasoline, two windshield wipers and a lecture on flying.

7—I don't think that, even if a lifesaver has done a perfect job, he will always be the only fellow to depend on, no matter how many years later you fall overboard.

8—I heard him say when he first took the job that he was for low taxes, a cutting of Federal expenses 25 per cent, a reduction in the army of Federal employes and a balanced budget.

9—I think America would have been in the soup years ago if it hadn't been for the tradition that eight years was plenty for any President, however able, and that four years was too long for most of 'em.

10—I can never forget the employment of the Chicago Superintendent of Sewers as "The Voice" at the Democratic convention.

11—I think that just as fish and house guests begin to smell after the third day, President, radio programs, musical shows, party policies and air-conditioned apartments get slightly whiferoo after the eighth year.

12—I like my baloney, bunk and applesauce as well as the average American (and I expect every public man to keep me supplied), but I think it's time they were erased from the compulsory list.

Whither France?

By Barnet Nover

Hitler And The Vichy Government

WHEN HITLER agreed to limit the German military occupation of France to only part, though the larger and richer part, of that nation he was not being moved by any spirit of generosity to a gallant foe. On the contrary, his action was designed to extract every last ounce of advantage out of France's capitulation.

In the first place, the creation of an unoccupied zone governed by Frenchmen enabled Germany to keep for service elsewhere troops that would have been needed to garrison that area. Secondly, it made it possible for Hitler to saddle the costs of maintaining forces in the occupied zone on the shoulders of the Vichy regime. But most important of all, it prevented the creation of a French government-in-exile similar to the Polish, Czech, Norwegian, Dutch and Belgian governments-in-exile now established in London.

FROM A STRATEGIC point of view the creation of a French government-in-exile would have been little short of a disaster to the Axis. As the heir of the regime which has ruled France in the past it would have had a claim to the loyalty of the French fleet and the French Empire. The continuance of the Franco-British alliance despite the surrender of the French army and the occupation of France by enemy troops would thus have been possible.

Hitler was, therefore, pursuing a shrewd course in leaving a section of France unoccupied. For only in that way could it be possible to have on French soil a government which Frenchmen in France and in the empire could recognize, and support, though not necessarily with enthusiasm.

WHEN THE FRANCO-GERMAN and Franco-Italian armistices were signed the strategic problem facing Hitler and Mussolini appeared to be simple.

It was not expected either in Berlin or Rome that Great Britain would long hold out in view of her isolation and the overwhelming force which the Axis could seemingly muster against her. The hope may even have been entertained that Great Britain would succumb without a struggle by a peace offensive alone.

These anticipations have proved false. Neither Hitler's speeches nor Hitler's threats nor the fearful punishment visited on London and other British cities by the German Luftwaffe have broken the will of the British people or their determination to fight on. For some time, therefore, Hitler and Mussolini have been forced to the necessity of considering other ways of overcoming British resistance than by a frontal attack on the British Isles.

THE German-Italian-Japanese alliance of September 27 was one expression of this change in strategy. Germany's occupation of Rumania, the pressure on Greece, Bulgaria and Turkey to cooperate with the Axis in a German drive to the east was another manifestation of the same thing.

It is still not clear just what is Russia's attitude toward the prospective German campaign in the east, although the fact that she has agreed to participate in a four power Danubian conference with Germany, Italy and Rumania on October 28, suggests she will not oppose the Axis. But even were she prepared to pursue a policy of benevolent neutrality toward German and Italian plans, it might take a long time before British power in the East Mediterranean could be destroyed.

THE IMPORTANCE of both Spain and France to the Axis scheme of things thus becomes clear. Spain's tacit or active cooperation is needed in any attack on Gibraltar. It is understandable, therefore, why Ramon Serrano Suner, Franco's brother-in-law, was summoned to Berlin and Rome, and why this week Hitler held a conference with Franco. It is also understandable why negotiations have been going on between the Third Reich and the Vichy government.

These negotiations have produced a flood of unverified rumors, the most extreme and least credible being that the Vichy government would become an active partner of the Axis in waging war on Great Britain.

More credible are the rumors that in return for certain concessions the Vichy regime might make available to the Axis various air and naval bases in North and West Africa. If this happens, and it is now very likely, the danger of French North and West Africa joining forces with de Gaulle would be ended and with it the danger of the Italian forces in Libya and Egypt being caught between two fires.

Furthermore, the Axis would, from these French bases, be able to harass British communications and ultimately, perhaps, break the British blockade which bears down on Germany and Italy—particularly the latter—with cumulative force.

What can Hitler give the Vichy government in return for these favors which, insofar as they would work against British interests would work against France's long-run interests as well?

Well, Hitler might permit the Vichy regime to establish itself in Paris. He might ease the burden of reparations now weighing down the government of unoccupied France. He might also ease the drastic restrictions now preventing any movement of persons, goods and mail between occupied and unoccupied France. Above all, in dealing with Vichy, he has the advantage that comes from being able to threaten to occupy the rest of France unless his wishes are met.

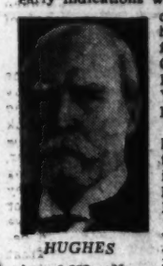
Some time ago Marshal Petain admitted that France had a noose around her neck. It begins to look as though Hitler is now pulling the rope ends.

Bygone Elections

By Paul Furman

The Long Count

THE REAL excitement in the election of 1916 lay in the uncertainty as to the winner. All the early indications were that President Wilson had been defeated by Charles Evans Hughes, of New York, Republican nominee.



HUGHES

The result hinged upon the final count in California, Minnesota, New Hampshire and North Dakota. Wilson carried North Dakota, Hampshire by lost Minnesota left the election on California, where his vote was 3,773 more than Hughes', Hughes had 255 electoral votes to 276 for Wilson.

The war in Europe had broken out in August, 1914. Then, as this year, the issue was foreign policy. The Wilson slogan was that he had kept us out of war. A little over a month after his second inauguration we were in.

BEFORE THE Republican National Convention met in Chicago on June 7, 1916, the possible candidates discussed were Theodore Roosevelt, Elihu Root, of New York, and United States Supreme Court Justice Hughes. The Progressives met there at the same time determined to force the Republicans to take Roosevelt.

Roosevelt, seeing the hopelessness of agreement on himself, suggested Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, as a compromise candidate. This was hooted down by the Progressives, who nominated Roosevelt.

The Republicans named Hughes on the third ballot and Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, was put up for Vice President. Roosevelt declined the Progressive nomination and campaigned for Hughes.

There was no opposition to the renomination of Wilson and Marshall in the Democratic convention, which met in St. Louis.

Song of a Worm

Oh for a friend who would let me be,
And not try to make me a devotee
Of all of the causes she has in the brew
And of all the things she thinks I should do,
Who would not seem to plot with fiendish cunning,
To drag me to everything that I've been shunning,
Who would not of my life take such a firm hold,
And try to fit me into her own special mold.

Today's Social Notes

From the Truthtown Torch

Socialites are preparing for a simple old-fashioned Halloween next Wednesday. Cave dwellers attired as milk maids and farm hands will hold their annual dance at the Plush Sofa Club.

The really big party of the night will be that of Mrs. Roswell Clymer in the ballroom of the Hotel Swank. Mrs. Clymer scored one on her rival, Mrs. Parvenu Popinjay, by contracting for the ballroom a year ago. Mrs. Popinjay will give her Halloween party at the Hotel Rococco, which is much smaller, although more grotesque in ornamentation.

Both ballrooms will be transformed by New York decorators into barn-like settings where the town nabobs will bob for apples in gilded tubs, pin on the donkey's tail, and play "Farmer in the Dell."

"I think the playing of these simple games will be a real contribution to democracy," said Mrs. Clymer yesterday.

Scintillating Circles

Seldom has so brilliant an assemblage been seen in Mausoleum Hall as that which attended the dance recital last night of Mme. Zouave-Zinnia, surrealist terpsichorean interpreter.

With the Ottley Ottomans were Prince Divan, former European playboy; Lady Gwaldys Chaise-Longue, whose great aunt used to play rummy with Edward VII; Miss Bettye Couch, whose debut last season cost $50,000, and Count Afghan, whose grandmother is said to have been a favorite of Emperor Franz Joseph.

Also present were: Emmanual Duffer, who has not missed a polo game at the Emerald Acres Field for 15 years, and Mrs. Duffer, who was a Nitter before her marriage in 1902 at a brilliant ceremony at St. Glacier Church; Marty Juniper, former master of fox hounds of the Pink Jacket Hunt; Huntington Rhinestone, perennial source of glamor girls; Carrington Slepp, whose mother was a Flitterjig; Roberto Adagio, noted Latin lover; Philander Plunkette, recently divorced from his fourth wife and now giving Mrs. Ambrose Devereau-Kim a rush, and Mrs. Boxwood Maze, who is recovering from an attack of amnesia.

The Hyphenates

Tour de Force

Mrs. Badminton Bellwether, head of the Ladies' Parachute Patrol, will abandon her military duties for the next few weeks to make a political speaking tour. Mrs. Bellwether will talk to exclusive social groups in several of the larger cities where she has social connections. She also will lend her presence to the reception lines at several large political teas.

"While I hate to leave my patrol activities at this time," said Mrs. Bellwether, "yet I feel that my party needs me. Important as the defense of democracy is I feel I should save America first."

Cocktail Charity

A new society—The Urgent Aid Association for War Sufferers—of which Mrs. Alexander Rumba is president, is getting its activities under way. Wednesday the newly elected board of the organization held a luncheon at the Hotel Swank. Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Rumba entertained the board and officers at cocktails. A general cocktail party for the members and their friends will be held this afternoon at the Hotel Rococco.

The junior board of the organization will hold a cocktail party tomorrow afternoon and Mrs. Rumba will entertain her board with a breakfast Sunday at her estate. Monday night a general opening dinner will be held at the Hotel Swank and Tuesday night a house warming and dance will be held at the group's headquarters in the old Birdhaven mansion.

Board of Approval Is Being Formed To Test Styles

ALTHOUGH America's first independent fashion showing of native designed and manufactured clothes took place only two months ago, already a board of approval is being formed for the "try-out" of future style inspirations before they are placed on the market. This clearing house of ideas was announced by F. Eugene Ackerman, former newspaper editor and Washington merchandise expert, who is serving as temporory president for the proposed "American Council of Style and Design."

The plan back of this council was summed up recently at Mr. Ackerman's New York headquarters as being "A fashion chamber of commerce; a closely tied-up method of exploiting American talent and design; a place to show direct trends affecting fundamental bases of style; headquarters for protecting originality in design; a central establishment for combining manufacturing and display facilities—in short, a 'guinea pig' forum on the subject of design."

Menu Can Fit The Thin Man, Plump Wife

By Passing Up Some Courses, Woman Can Reduce

By Ida Jean Kain

IT'S HARD to plan menus that enable the wife to keep slim and and let the husband keep his weight within reason. But family dietetics become really complicated when the menus must meet the widely different needs of the thin man, growing children and plump housewife.

A case in point is presented by a housewife who writes:

"I must prepare nourishing food for growing boys and oceans of desserts for an underweight husband. I am too hungry and too weary to fast and exercise. I am 5 feet 2 and weigh 140 pounds—all tummy and hips."

Let's take this typical American family and plan a day's meals that will help the husband to gain in spite of the strain of earning the bread and butter, the children to grow taller than their parents, and the plump wife to slim down to look like the girl he married.

Need Same Basic Foods.

Each member of your family needs the same basic foods. You should build the three meals a day around milk, eggs, meat, vegetables, fruit, salads, bread, butter and cereal. These foods supply both the building materials for growth, and the repair and regulating materials for health.

Breakfast is very important, but, fortunately, it is the most flexible meal of the day. It should furnish one-third of the day's calories for the underweight and the children. If your thin man has no appetite in the morning, put more vitamin B1 in the diet. Start tomorrow by giving him a small serving of hot, whole grain cereal to which 2 or 3 tablespoons of wheat germ have been added while cooking.

Wheat germ is one of the rich food sources of Vitamin B1. This vitamin promotes growth as well as appetite. The cereal for the underweight should be served with cream, that of the children with whole milk. Cereal with thin cream and sugar can add as many as 350 calories to the diet. Needless to say, you skip this course—if you want to reduce. You can have a whole breakfast for 250 calories: Fruit juice and egg, one slice of toast, one-half pat of butter, and clear coffee. That same list, without restrictions, completes the breakfast for the rest of the family. By the liberal use of buttered toast with jam or honey and plenty of cream, the same meal can be expanded to 1,000 calories.

Don't Let Husband Sleep

Don't let your husband sleep until the last minute, thinking he needs the rest. He probably does, but he can't gain weight unless he takes time to eat. At least 20 minutes should be allowed for this first meal of the day.

In time, the addition of Vitamin B1 to the diet will result in a better appetite for lunch. The addition of a glass of milk to the "business man's special" will keep the husband on a gaining diet.

Noon is usually the easiest time for the housewife to diet but it should be a well balanced meal to keep up the vitality. For lunch you can have soup, a sandwich, with butter and mayonnaise restricted, fruit. If the children are home, follow the same menu, with butter and mayonnaise for the sandwich, and add a glass of whole milk and cookies.

For the dinner menu have meat, two cooked vegetables, a salad, desert, bread and butter. Cook the meat any way except by frying and trim every particle of fat from your portion. Take your salad with vinegar and seasoning, restrict the bread and butter, and skip the dessert. The amounts of bread, butter, cream, mayonnaise and dessert can make a difference of hundreds of calories in the same menu.

Fifteen minutes of streamlining exercise taken before your are tired from work will gradually increase your vitality and it will vastly improve your figure.

Spinach Supreme Flavorsome Dish

The old bugaboo of cramming a spoonful of spinach down the throat of every child fades into a whisp of nothing with the newest of "Vitamin Dishes." There's still spinach in it for that leafy green vegetable contains several of the vitamins and minerals that cannot be skipped over, but it is combined with milk and cheese and corn flakes for additional vitamins and taste. A pinch of salt, a dash of pepper and the result is a dish supreme.

Here is a recipe for making six servings of this excellent vitamin dish.

Spinach Supreme

Heat ¾ cup milk and one 8-ounce package of cheese in top of double boiler, stirring until cheese is melted. Add ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Drain 3½ cups cooked spinach thoroughly and place in a casserole. Pour the cheese mixture over it. Crush 1 cup corn flakes slightly and sprinkle over top. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees about 30 minutes.

And Now the Nylon Dress!

Out of coal, air and water has come the entire ensemble worn by the model above. The peplum dinner gown, hat and muff are of the new nylon velvet, not yet available commercially, but which is said to be the only velvet material inherently crush resistant. Plastic materials from the du-Pont laboratories make the gold sash and the jewelry and trim the shoes. Gloves—and of course, stockings—are of nylon

The game has proved to be a success with both children and grown-ups who attend the "game evenings" she holds regularly at her Clarendon home.

MRS. PHILLIPS

Mrs. Phillips has been inventing games since 1905. Notebooks in her studio bulge with ideas and sketches for new ones. The patent for her best-known brainchild was bought by Parker Bros., who published it as Monopoly—remember? She worked out Monopoly and another current favorite, the Landlord's Game, to illustrate the workings of Henry George's single tax plan. "I don't force economics on people who buy the games," she explains, "but if they want to know more they write to me and I send them literature about the Georgist movement."

After hearing of plans to stimulate interest in Latin America among United States women's clubs, a South American diplomat ejaculated, "My God, what a fate! First the Marines and now the clubwomen!"

One rainy day recently, a Mrs. Smith started chatting at the notions counter of a department store with another customer, a quaint old lady whom she recognized at once when she reappeared beside her a few minutes later at another counter. "No, I'm not buying anything here," the old lady explained in a flustered manner; "I just seem to have mislaid my umbrella." To Mrs. Smith's surprise, the incident was repeated at four more counters; each time the old lady said, "No, I haven't found the umbrella."

Smiling to herself at the series of coincidences, Mrs. Smith was about to leave the store when she realized that, though she had left home without an umbrella, she now had one. She dashed back in search of her erstwhile companion and sheepishly handed it to her. "Thank you so much, the old lady said shyly. "You picked it up at the notions counter, but I hated to say anything."

A Department of Labor employee returned from a field trip not long ago and immediately dispatched an indignant letter to the manager of a small-town hotel where she had discovered bedbugs. She received a prompt reply, expressing the manager's horror and declaring that hers was the first complaint of that kind he had received in all his years with the hotel. But in the same envelope was a memo which his secretary apparently had enclosed by mistake. It read, "Send usual bedbug letter."

New Silhouette

The "trumpet silhouette" so trumpeted by New York fashion authorities has a noteworthy convert on the West Coast. Irene Dunne, known as one of the best dressed of film stars, recently wore a black silk afternoon dress, slim and straight to just above her knees where it broke into a full flounce. Her hat was a red oversize felt beret, banded with black.

'Sweetest Romance in School' Wanes After Term End; On Finding a Job, Boy Becomes Indifferent; Finally Breaks Date Without Apology; Girl Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have had several "crushes" in my life, but only one boy has really meant anything to me. He is two years older than I; very handsome and highly intelligent. I have known him nearly two years, but we went together for just about three months,— the most pleasant three months of my life. This was while we were in school.

After he graduated, I heard from him once in a while. We had been the best of friends, with no strings attached. In the time we went together, he kissed me only once; and our romance was always referred to as, "the sweetest romance in school." He lived about 40 miles out of town, and could have dates with me only once a week.

Now, the situation is greatly changed. For one thing, he has a job in the city, and could see me as often as he wished. But for another thing, he no longer seems interested. I'm afraid he knows I love him, for he made a date with me recently and failed to keep it. He didn't even bother to call and explain, before or later. I've lived in a state of "suspended animation" ever since, and now I'm beginning to believe he never will call.

I can think of several reasons why we drifted apart. Firstly, the difficulty of his coming to see me, in the months after he left school and returned home. Secondly, my quick temper. Thirdly, the fact that I kept him running after me (although, secretly, I always felt he was too good for me; actually far superior to me). But we WERE in love and I know it; just as I know I still love him.

The fourth reason is that I rather "wore my heart on my sleeve," during the later weeks of our romance. I wrote him five letters after he left school. The last one was mailed after the broken date. In it, I told him I wasn't angry, as I felt he must have had some good reason for failing to come. But he never replied.

What can I do now? I am afraid he has no respect for me any more. How can I regain his respect and love and attention? I will act on whatever advice you give me. Sincerely,

KATHLEEN K.

Diverging Interests Responsible for Rift

DEAR KATHLEEN: Stop blaming yourself for the fading romance. It isn't your fault. Blame it on Fate, or circumstance. The boy's waning interest doesn't necessarily indicate loss of respect. A man doesn't respect a girl less because she loves him (unless, of course, she makes a clinging nuisance of herself). On the contrary, he is inclined to respect her the more, for having the intelligence and discernment to appreciate his superiority to other men—providing, as I say, she doesn't act on the assumption that her love of him gives her a proprietary claim upon his person and society.

I think this boy's changed attitude stems from his belief that you and he no longer occupy the same world,—in the sense of having comparable experiences and sharing identical interests. Since leaving school, and particularly since going to work, I suppose he feels that he has crossed the threshold into the grown-ups' world, and that his enthusiasms of other years were more or less "kid stuff,"—his erstwhile romantic attachment to you included. No doubt he is meeting a never-ending flow of new persons, including girl associates in business, so that his attention is being gradually weaned away from last year's companions and projects.

Probably the only way you could get back in stride with him would be through going to work yourself, so that you would be able, once more, to "speak his language." And that reminds me of what a young matron of my acquaintance told me recently about her romance of ten years ago with her husband. They had fallen in love during high school days, for the light-hearted reason that they danced together so beautifully. Then the man went off to college, and the girl (who graduated in the same class) stayed home for that year.

As months drifted by, and she saw him at holidays, she realized their interests were diverging dismally. His campus cliches, his references to his studies and his professors, to fraternity activities and the whole repertory of things which make up college life, fell strangely upon her ears. There was nothing spontaneous or comprehending she could say in return. She made up her mind this would never do; that it was up to her to keep step with the boy she loved.

So she got busy and devoted the remainder of that school year, and the entire following summer, to amassing a bank account and taking intensive study courses which would permit her to enroll, in the autumn, as a freshman in the college where he would then be a sophomore. From that year of her "great awakening" to this, their interests have become more deeply intertwined every day and larger in scope—for the simple reason that she willed they should, and worked to bring her ambition to pass.

Undoubtedly there is a moral for you in her example. She wasted no time crying over spilt milk; none in reproaching herself for the loss of one year's close companionship. She knew what was most important to her happiness, and she took the realistic steps toward possessing and developing it.

Fortunately, you have kept the way open for a renewal of friendship with the boy—supposing your paths ever cross again in an arena of common interests—by refusing to take offense at his failure to call as promised. From now on, however, your own resourcefulness must see you through. If you are determined to recapture his attention, you must gain entree to his sphere of activities, so that you can see him occasionally on a comradely footing—and use that as a leverage in reviving his love. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Women's Page.

Good Speech Easily Acquired

WHAT A handicap poor English can be! The first evening at the club for this young couple—yet no one seemed to take them up. "They WAS such nice people, too," mourns the unhappy wife. "I CAN'T HARDLY understand it."

Of course her husband hesitates to explain that her slips in English might have been to blame, that educated people say "they WERE" and "CAN hardly."

That the dangerous part of carelessness in speech. Often we are the last to realize our faults.

Test yourself. Though you wouldn't stoop to such crudities as "AIN'T" for "ISN'T," there may be many more errors in your speech than you realize. Do you sometimes say "Between you and I," or "Let's you and I go?" "Between you and ME" and "Let's you and ME go" are correct—and they really are no harder to say than the wrong forms, are they?

You can so easily spruce up your English, acquire habits of speech that make you welcome anywhere. And, while you're about it, check on the fine points, too.

How eyebrows go up, for instance, when you show you don't know the right meaning of a word. Do you say "She AGGRAVATES me?" The word you want is "IRRITATE." "AGGRAVATE" means "increase," in the sense of "Worry AGGRAVATED his illness."

And beware those incorrect extra words—"OFF OF," "The fire was over WITH," "Off" and "The fire was over" are correct.

Your speech need never to be a barrier between you and the delightful people you'd like to know, if you root out little errors with the aid of our 40-page booklet. Lists mistakes in English you're likely to make and gives their correct forms. Explains right meanings of words often misused.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Common Errors in English," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Angel Food Cake Made Scientifically

Modern 'Aunt Susies' Perfect Recipes In Skyscraper Testing Kitchens

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Food Editor.

REMEMBER the scrambles that have taken place at country picnics and family reunions to get a coveted place near Aunt Susie's angel food cake? That cake was the piece de resistance of the day. It was her light hand and skill—and only hers—that could produce that delicious bit of tenderness that was the talk of the neighborhood. Aunt Mabel, Aunt Mathilda or Cousin Maggie could be counted on to bring golden fried chicken, crisp pickles and tangy potato salad, but it was only Aunt Susie who had the knack to produce the oven triumph—angel food cake.

Martha Ellyn

Today, however, anyone can make a cake of beautiful velvety texture by following the directions that have been worked out in scientific laboratories. Several days ago I was the guest of Miss Marie Sellars, director, consumer's research department, General Foods Corporation, New York City. High up over the city in her great laboratories, Miss Sellars directs a staff of 50 persons. This staff works constantly with a number of foods to supply the consumer with information concerning products so they may buy these intelligently and use them with happier results.

Cooks Don't Spoil Broth

There's not only one kitchen—but three in Miss Sellar's organization. And the theory that "too many cooks spoil the broth" is disproved, for I saw 15 home economists buzzing around in the recipe, consumer and institutional kitchens. In the recipe kitchen are developed directions for the use of products that appear in recipe booklets, cook books, advertising pages, radio programs and on food packages. Here, too, dishes are made to be photographed for editorial and advertising use. The consumer's kitchen is used for product tests and for special experimental cookery. Several times a day the technical staff meets here for taste-testing. Frequently the staff is joined by advertising, sales and research department representatives.

The institution kitchen is for large quantity cookery and is equipped with institution-size stoves, coffee urns, bakery ovens and mixers. In it originates the recipe service to institutions such as restaurants, hotels and hospitals. In these three kitchens about 1,000 cakes alone are baked a month. Since the staff works eight hours a day, it means that every hour four cakes are baked.

5,000 Tested Recipes

From the consumer's department are sent recipe booklets, cook books and booklets of cooking techniques containing some of the 5,000 tested recipes in the collection. Material as well as literature is offered to schools for teacher and student use. Miss Sellars, who supervises the activities of the consumer's research department, is known to many women throughout the country for her editorial material in national magazines.

There were cakes everywhere—to the right and to the left, all seeming to be perfect specimens. But it was a GREAT angel food cake that intrigued me. It had been made by a recently revised recipe. I couldn't help think that if this recipe for the GREAT cake had been available when I was a child, I would not have had to scramble for a place at the picnic close by the cake. This cake is such a popular variety that Miss Sellars decided to work out proportions for making a super one. Not only is it a favorite cake, but it is also an ideal kind for children—and especially for their parties. Here is the recipe for the large cake and the family size one, too.

Large Angel Cake—(10 to 12 eggs whites). Sift 1 cup cake flour once, measure, add ½ cup sugar, and sift together 4 times. Add ¼ teaspoon salt to 1¼ cups egg whites and beat with rotary egg beater or flat wire whisk. When foamy, add 1¼ teaspoons cream of tartar and continue beating until eggs are stiff enough to hold up in peaks, but not dry. Add 1 cup sugar, 2 tablespoons at a time, beating with rotary egg beater or whisk after each addition until sugar is JUST blended. Fold in 1 teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon almond extract. Then sift about ¼ cup flour over mixture and fold in lightly; repeat until all is used. Turn into ungreased 10-inch angel food pan. Cut gently through batter with knife to remove air bubbles. Bake in slow oven, 325 degrees, 1 hour, or until done. Remove from oven and invert pan 1 hour, or until cold.

Family Size Angel Cake—Use above recipe, decreasing sugar to 1¼ cups, egg whites to 1 cup and cream of tartar to 1 teaspoon. Bake in ungreased 9-inch angel food pan in slow oven, 325 degrees, for 45 to 50 minutes.

Note: Remove eggs from refrigerator several hours before using. They beat up lighter and more easily when at room temperature, and give increased fineness of grain and delicacy of texture to angel food cakes.

Cake baking calls for but eight simple rules to make a success. It must be planned and not done in a hit-and-miss way. First choose the recipe and understand it, then assemble the ingredients and utensils. Well designed tools will make measuring accurate and speed mixing. Quality ingredients should be used—fresh eggs, sweet shortening, fine sugar, reliable baking powder and cake flour. Measurements should be level and accurate. Mixing directions must be followed—the way you combine and handle the ingredients. Pans should be of the type and size specified. Don't guess about temperatures; for the temperature must be right. Cool cakes properly.

Queen of Cakes in Modern Fashion and Its Scientific Sponsor

Angel food cake is one criterion on which cooks can win fame in cooking. If you admire those who can bake a luscious angel food cake, yet do nothing about it but sigh, here's news for you. Cake making can be pleasantly exciting and simple if reliable products and tested recipes are used. Try the recipe developed in the kitchens directed by Miss Marie Sellars (right) and win applause and husbandly plaudits

SPAGHETTI and macaroni are twin foods in that they both belong in the paste family. Few foods lend themselves to being prepared in such a variety of ways. Sliced stuffed dill pickles make tangy appetizers. Cut large pickles in halves, remove the centers, drain, and then stuff with cream cheese, seasoned with minced onions, celery, green peppers and parsley. Chill until firm and cut into half-inch slices.

Pork Loin Rich in Appetite Vitamin

Did you know that one serving of pork loin, cooked either as a chop or a roast, will furnish a plentiful day's allowance of thiamine (Vitamin B-1) for the adult.

Inez S. Wilson, home economist, National Livestock and Meat Board, reminds us that this statement is made in the light of recent research wherein thiamine has been isolated from the Vitamin B complex, the required amounts established, and foods analyzed to determine their thiamine content.

Thiamine is needed for growth, to promote the health of body cells and to aid in utilizing carbohydrates. Thiamine also prevents the disease called beriberi, and because it creates a desire for food is often referred to as the "appetite vitamin."

Women Voters Plan Drive For Merit Bill

League to Campaign In Home Districts Of Congressmen

By Edward Ryan

A pre-election drive to insure eventual passage of the Ramspeck Bill, civil service measure to bring thousands of Government employes into the merit system, was promised yesterday by the National League of Women Voters.

Miss Marguerite M. Wells, league president, announced that her organization plans to carry its campaign for passage of the Ramspeck Bill into the home districts of Congressmen.

League members, she said, will be advised "to convert members of Congress who are wrong, to strengthen the will of those who are right, to show those who do not known, what the Ramspeck bill signifies."

In Legislative Tangle

The Ramspeck bill is waiting a legislative tangle to be cleared up after the election. In February the House passed the measure with the Nichols amendment, requiring civil-service extension to follow a State-job-quota plan. The Senate, in passing the measure, dropped the Nichols plan, added a clause to stop the Civil Service Commission from requiring photographs from job applicants, a move intended to prevent racial discrimination in hiring Government workers. The House, two weeks ago, blocked final approval, partly because of the photo clause, and sent it back to conference with instructions to its own conferees to demand restoration of the Nichols plan.

The conferees agreed to delay further action until after the election.

The Nichols quota plan would block extending the civil service benefits of the bill to employes from States over their job quotas in the Federal service, until the quotas of all States were filled. This ban would apply to employes with residence in the District, Maryland, Virginia, and a dozen other over-quota States.

Miss Wells said that the league strategy would be to get Congressmen to turn against the "crippling" Nichols amendment.

Two appeals boards for handling employe grievances were set up in the Wage-Hour Division yesterday following a series of rows between personnel executives and the U. F. W. local.

One five-man board, headed by Merle D. Vincent, director of the division's hearings branch, will review employe efficiency ratings. The efficiency ratings, basis for promotions and pay increases, are a frequent source of employe protests through the Government service.

Other board members are Osgood Nichols, assistant editorial chief and a member of the union; Leland S. Reid, Jacob I. Bellow and Leo Erck, of the inspection branch.

Three-Man Board

General grievances will be heard by a three-man board, including Vincent, Henry T. Hunt, chief hearings examiner, and Walter LeMat, chief of planning and procedures.

The appeals board notice said that in the future the director of the administrative branch would receive the first report of an employe grievance, assemble the necessary records, and turn the problem over to the appeals board. The board will meet with the employe, make a record of the hearing, and recommend the decision to the wage-hour administrator.

Eleanor Nelson, U. F. W. secretary-treasurer, said that her organization welcomed establishment of the appeals machinery. It would seek reinstatement of Frederick Compton, discharged from the Richmond (Va.) wage-hour office, "as a necessary first step to eliminate union discrimination in the division."

Treasury Worker Gets Tax Refund

Jo V. Morgan, one-man Board of Tax Appeals for the District, yesterday ordered a refund of $35.55 in income taxes paid by Henry C. Murphy, a Treasury Department employe, on the ground that he is not domiciled in the District, although he resides here.

Morgan used as the basis for the opinion, the famous Sweeney case, in which the U. S. Court of Appeals held a Goverment employe, although a resident of this city, is not necessarily domiciled here. In fact, the court held James Sweeney, an employe of the Department of Justice, to be domiciled in Massachusetts, his home State. Murphy has maintained his legal residence in Wayne County, Mich.

I WAS AMAZED AT THE NEVER-FAILING GOODNESS OF SANITARY'S GUARANTEED MEATS

Says Mrs. C. D. Lowe

TO get the facts, Mrs. C. D. Lowe joined with fourteen other well known local housewives to test Sanitary's new Guaranteed Meats service. For 30 days each housewife bought all her meats from her neighborhood Sanitary market. At the end of the month each "jurywoman" reported her findings and Mrs. Lowe had this to say:

"I bought 23 times during the month test. Frankly, I was amazed at the never-failing goodness of Sanitary Guaranteed Meats. All were tender and juicy—just as guaranteed."—Mrs. C. D. Lowe.

Eleanor Connolly Back From Trip to Mexico

But Frances Parkinson Keys, D. C. Author, Who Accompanied Her, Is Remaining To Complete Her Research for a New Book

By Hope Ridings Miller

BACK IN TOWN after a sojourn "south of the border," Miss Eleanor Connolly brings word that Frances Parkinson Keyes, who accompanied her to Mexico City early in August, is lingering on to complete her research for another book, but that she probably will be traveling homeward soon.

Hope Ridings Miller

An author who never has had one tome published before plans for another were well under way, Mrs. Keyes' seventh novel, "Fielding's Folly," completed last spring, goes on the stands today. Her next book, for which she is still gathering material, will be a story of "The Virgin of Guadalupe."

Leaving Washington August 7, Mrs. Keyes and Miss Connolly went by plane to Mexico City, arriving there "in time for lunch the next day." For the first part of their visit, they had rooms in a downtown hotel, and then decided to take a house in Chapultepec Heights.

From there they made a number of week-end trips to surrounding points of interest, and Mrs. Keyes began interviewing such outstanding personalities as the Archbishop of Mexico and his corps of Catholic leaders who could help her collect material for her book.

The United States Ambassador to Mexico and Mrs. Josephus Daniels entertained Mrs. Keyes and Miss Connolly at the Embassy several times, and a few days ago Mrs. Keyes gave a luncheon in honor of Mrs. Daniels.

According to present plans, Mrs. Keyes will start home early next month, stopping in Texas for some brief visits before she comes on to Washington, and her home in Alexandria, about the middle of November. "Fielding's Folly," incidentally, was finished last spring shortly after Mrs. Keyes moved to her new home in Alexandria. It's a diverting story of marriage—involving a girl who stemmed from sturdy New England stock and a Virginia gentleman whose traditional Southern male conceptions lead to a variety of complications.

MISS CONNOLLY, who left Mexico City by plane early this month, stopped off in Houston, Tex., for a visit with Mrs. Donald Hall and then continued her journey, also by plane, to Washington. Hardly here long enough to get her bags unpacked, she will be off again today, going first to Philadelphia and from them to New York and Boston. She expects to be back in her Georgetown house the latter part of next week.

Immediately after she returned home from Mexico, she set off for Richmond, Va., to attend a meeting of that city's branch of the Georgetown Visitation Alumnae Association. As president of the latter organization, she traveled continually to be present at its branch gatherings all over this section of the country, and she probably will do the same this season. Anyway, she will speak at alumnae meetings both in Philadelphia and in Boston.

SCHEDULED TO SAIL from Lisbon on the S. S. Exeter, November 6, are Mr. and Mrs. John Carter Vincent, who will come directly to Washington. For more than a year they have been at Geneva, where Mr. Vincent served as consul. Recently ordered to Shanghai, he will be here briefly before going on to his new post. Whether Mrs. Vincent will accompany him to China has not yet been decided, but there's a good chance she will.

Formerly on duty here at the State Department, Mr. Vincent and his wife came to the Capital in 1936 from Nanking, China, where he served on the consular staff for some time. While here, they lived in a Georgetown house that Mrs. Vincent attractively did over from roof to basement—thereby proving her prowess as an interior decorator, a profession she followed before her marriage. Later, she did over another old house in the same block on N street—a place that under her practiced hand was transformed into a nursery school for Georgetown children.

Miss Nash Fetes Arthur B. Campbell

Miss Carolyn Nash was hostess at a small dinner party last evening in honor of Arthur Bradley Campbell. The party took place at the 1925 F Street Club.

Mr. Campbell, who was in town for just a few hours en route from Hot Springs, Va., to New York, plans to come to Washington later to spend the winter.

Holcombs Honor Dr. and Mrs. T. V. Soong

The Commandant of the Marine Corps and Mrs. Thomas Holcomb entertained at a dinner party last evening in honor of Dr. and Mrs. T. V. Soong. Their first dinner party of the season, it was given in their quarters at the Marine Barracks.

On November 4, Gen. and Mrs. Holcomb will entertain at a large reception.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

NEARLY EVERYBODY here from Europe these days has an escape story to tell, but one of the most hair raising is 36-year-old Theodore Brock's. He was mayor of the iron shipping port of Narvik, which was on everybody's tongue last spring, and has just arrived in this country via Siberia. With Sigrid Undset he will lecture tonight in Baltimore.

DUDLEY HARMON

Condemned to death by the Germans, Mr. Brock managed to escape by jumping out of a window. He sneaked through northern Norway, walking across mountains and negotiating fjords, until he reached Sweden.

• • • •

BEFORE THIS, when the Germans were fighting for Narvik, the young mayor suddenly got the impression that the Norwegians and British had won. So he set out prematurely arresting Germans in Narvik right and left. He also told jubilant stories of how he had fooled the enemy, and how he had harbored the British consul in his cellar for seven weeks. (The consul is now safe in London). This sort of behavior not unnaturally led, when the Allies were forced to withdraw, to Mr. Brock's court-martial by the enemy. He will tell his own story of his miraculous escape in lectures all over the United States.

THE WAR may have forced the closing of our legations and consulates in several European countries, but it has caused at least one branch of the Foreign Service to expand. This is the courier division, which transports our diplomatic correspondence all over the world. In Europe, before September, 1939, only three men were required to take the diplomatic pouches from one embassy to another. Now the number has been stepped up to 11.

To the general public, the word courier has a romantic sound. One thinks of the men who carry diplomatic mail as continually fighting off blondes who offer glasses of drugged champagne. Or hurling bodily from train windows desperadoes who are after the pouch. But Nathanial Davis, who is Chief of the Division of Foreign Service Administration, says it's really not a romantic profession at all. In fact, since the war, it's often an acutely uncomfortable one.

WITH TRANSPORTATION abroad all messed up, the couriers have to travel any way they can. A ride begged from a freight truck is these days a not uncommon way of getting the pouch through. To enter Holland, Belgium, and other occupied countries, the couriers have to secure each time a permit from the German military authorities. This usually takes several days, so, though there are more couriers than before, the service is slower. As they are in the different countries too brief a time to obtain the necessary ration cards, they must carry their own supply of food with them.

• • • •

ONE PET THEORY people have about couriers is that they must never let their dispatch boxes out of their sight. This happens to be perfectly true. Just after the last war, Mr. Davis was asked to take charge of some diplomatic mail sent from Moscow to Rumania. To his surprise, he found waiting for him at the station not a pouch or dispatch box, but ten large, heavy canvas bags. They happened to be full of stationery and office supplies, but Mr. Davis, in his innocence, thought they were all valuable secret documents. So he wedged all ten into one small compartment with him and spent an anxious journey continually counting to see if all were there.

"THIS WINTER the couriers will have an even more difficult time," says he. "The trains probably won't be heated, all service will have been done away with, and many a time they will probable be dumped off at the railroad station of some jumping off place to wait hours for another connection."

The couriers get $3,000 a year and expenses. Though one can't imagine them staying in the same place for more than a few hours at a time, many of them are married and have families. Most began as clerks in the foreign service, and travel, even though continuous, they find exciting following years bent over a desk.

Chile Names Mitchels as New Envoy

Ambassador and Wife Expected to Arrive Here in December

The new Ambassador from Chile will be Senator Rodolfo Mitchels. He will succeed Antonio Cabero, who with Senora de Cabero will sail November 16 to return to their homeland.

Senator Mitchels knows this country well, having visited it several times. He was Commissioner of Chile at the New York World's Fair last year. His wife, who is now in New York, has a sister who is married to an American. One of their two daughters, Senorita Cristina Mitchels, visited the embassy here last winter for several weeks.

The envoy has been named to represent Chile at the inauguration November 30 of President Camacho of Mexico. It's probable that Senora de Mitchels will join him there and that they'll come to the Capital early in December. The new Ambassador is a lawyer by profession.

Brooke-Hall Nuptials Set

Miss Bette Brooke and Capt. William Charles Hall, whose engagment was recently announced by the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Brooke, have selected Saturday, November 2, as the date of their wedding. Only members of the two families will attend the ceremony, which will take place at 5:30 in the Chapel of the Church of the Covenant. The Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney will officiate, and an informal reception for close friends will follow at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Many parties are being given in honor of the couple. Capt. John L. Person, who is Assistant Engineer Commissioner, and Mrs. Person will entertain at cocktails tomorrow, and Mr. and Mrs. John Sylvester Hardester, jr., will entertain at cocktails on Sunday for them. Mrs. Griffin Taylor Garnett, jr., sister of Miss Brooke, and Mr. Garnett have issued invitations to an informal party next Friday, following the rehearsal.

Miss Virginia Schaeffer, niece of Mrs. William N. Doak, gave a breakfast for the couple at her aunt's home, Notre Nid, Fairfax, Va., earlier in the week.

D. C. Society Throngs Guggenheim Reception

Party Like Diplomatic Affair But on Much Larger Scale; Art Treasures Vie With Lovely Hostess as Object of Interest

By Carolyn Bell

"At last I've met my host," sighed one lady as she prepared to leave Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim's reception yesterday afternoon. Although the dapper colonel is well known to Washington society he was difficult to find in the sea of people.

One of the show places of the town is the spacious Schoellkopf house which the Guggenheims have leased for the season. A steady stream of cars climbed up to the driveway between 5 and 7 o'clock and by the end of the evening William—Washington's favorite doorman—was as hoarse as a politician on November 6.

The party had all the aspects of a diplomatic reception on a larger scale. Although "the whole town" had been asked it wasn't the usual Washington crush—for the rooms are admirably arranged for entertaining.

Receiving in the drawing room, which was hung with art treasures and filled with priceless Oriental pieces, was Mrs. Guggenheim, lovely in an emarld-green dinner gown and a cluster of pure white orchids. Yellow and russet chrysanthemums were used throughout the house. Rather breathlessly greeting the hostess was Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, who arrived in an open coupe driven by her nephew, Jimmie McCord. The Secretary of Agriculture, Claude Wickard, who will be off on a speaking tour shortly, was accompanied by Mrs. Wickard.

Aldace Walkers Attend Party

Champagne flowed from the bar that had been set up in the drawing room. Guests circulated between there and the exquisitely paneled dinning room, where from a large banquet table coffee and tea—as well as the necessary accompaniments — were served. Wearing a dashing white paradise fox fur hat, Mme. Prochnik poured coffee. She chatted with Mrs. Jouett Shouse, whose sable stole touched the floor. A tremendous bouquet of white, yellow, pink and lavender chrysanthemums centered the table.

Mr. and Mrs. Aldace Walker greeted friends here and there. A large cluster of white orchids was pinned to her gown. The retiring Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Cabero were there as were, Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, accompanied by Mme. Kutlu, wife of the Secretary of the embassy; the Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell and their daughter, Senora de Butendieck, and the Ambassador of Ecuador and Senora de Alfaro.

Mrs. Gould House Hunting

Mrs. Lionell Atwill chatted with George Abell, whose tweeds were more startling than ever. Mrs. Atwill went on later to a small dinner given by Mrs. Eldridge Jordan. Mr. and Mrs. William P. MacCracken were there as were Maj. Gen. Allen Gullion, Adjutant General of the Army; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, Mrs. William Allen Dougherty and Eleanor Flood who wore a smart plum-colored suit.

Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, who attended the party yesterday, is down briefly from Newport where she plans to remain until mid-December. At the Shoreham for a day or two Mrs. Gould is on a house hunting spree here. Mrs. W. W. Bride, whose black ensemble was relieved by a cluster of gardenias, chatted with Dr. and Mrs. Henry Healey and Capt. and Mrs. Henry Seiler. Mrs. Emil Hurja was there as were the Charge d'Affaires from Rumania and Mme. Coste; Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of the Soviet Embassy; the Minister from Guatemala and Senora de Recinos, Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Minister from Yugoslavia; the Minister from the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, Mme. Hurban, wife of the Minister from Czecho-Slovakia; the Minister from Nicaragua and Senora de De Bayle; the Minister from Finland and Mme. Procope and the Minister from Thailand and Mme. Seni Pramoj.

Pretty Miss Louise Stillwell, debutante of the season, wore a lipstick red jacket over her pencil slim black frock. Others there were the newly-appointed Undersecretary of Commerce, Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Maj. Burdette Fitch, Ralph Snowden Hill, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, Mrs. W. S. Culbertson, Mrs. Moran Drury, Mrs. Charles McEnerney, Mrs. Carlton Holdrege, Lady Bradford Leslie, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Robert M. Danforth, Mrs. Thomas Dawson, Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell and others.

Vichy Dachshunds Newlyweds Gifts

Mr. and Mrs. David M. Barkley arrived in town yesterday after an extended honeymoon trip and are at the home of Senator and Mrs. Barkley at 3102 Cleveland Avenue, where they will remain for several months.

Tomorrow there will arrive in Washington two special presents for the newly-weds. They are two dachshund dogs from Vichy, France, a present from Mr. Barkley's sister, Mrs. Douglas MacArthur, wife of the Third Secretary of the American Embassy there.

Mrs. Stapleton, Daughter Back From Hawaii

Will Open Their Home On Massachusetts Avenue Soon for the Winter

At home once more after a journey to Hawaii are Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton and her daughter, Miss Stellita Stapleton. They will open their house on Massachusetts Avenue shortly and plan to be here for the winter.

During their stay in Honolulu they found the beautiful Hawaiian city filled with Washingtonians or former residents of the Capital. Among those who entertained in their honor were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Adolphus Andrews and their daughter, Miss Frances Andrews. Capt. and Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson and their daughter, Miss Anne Wilkinson, gave a party for them aboard the Indianapolis, which the captain commands. Miss Wilkinson will return to Washington in time for the wedding of Miss Marian Kirk to Dr. John Appel early in January.

The Stapletons also saw Capt. and Mrs. Stanley Stone, who are active in polo circles on the island. Mrs. Stone, the former Miss Mary Myers, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, of Washington.

Among those who entertained for Mrs. Stapleton and her daughter were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dillingham, whose home is one of the loveliest in Hawaii. They are frequent visitors to the Capitol. The Stapletons were also feted by Alfred Castle, brother of William Castle, of this city, and Mrs. Castle.

Mrs. Morgan Discusses Peace Before A. A. U. W.

Anti-War Efforts of Past 20 Years Have Considered Only Negative Side of Problem, She Says

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor.

Peace efforts of the last two decades have proved futile because they tackled only the negative half of the problem, Mrs. Laura Puffer Morgan declared last night. She addressed the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women at a dinner honoring members of the national board, here for their annual fall conference.

Because the pacificists failed to work for a world organization that could enforce respect for law "their pacificism has been more fatal to peace than isolationism," said Mrs. Morgan.

She returned last June from Geneva, Switzerland, where she had made her headquarters for eight years, conducting the Geneva Information Service for 40 national peace organizations.

Peace leaders today are asking themselves, "Were we wrong?" said Mrs. Morgan.

The answer, she said, was in the fact that they proceeded on the false assumption that any nation, given free choice, would choose peace. Disarmament reached only one part of the problem, she pointed out, and was dangerous without setting up also machinery for enforcing order.

"If the United States had joined the League of Nations, the history of the last 20 years would have been entirely different," she asserted. "Following the present war, there must be set up some means of maintaining world order—a league, a federation or union now."

"The only hope now of having such a world emerge—one in which some type of organization will be possible, is the defeat of the Axis powers," she added. "No peaceful order can ever be established under totalitarianism."

Mrs. Morgan recalled the work of the A. A. U. W. for reduction of armament, the World Court and the Kellogg Pact, and said it could not have done otherwise than give its support to these in view of its sincere hope for a world free from war.

Mrs. Morgan was president of the local branch of the association—then called the Association of Collegiate Alumnae—in 1917. Reviewing briefly the history of the national headquarters clubhouse at 1634 I Street, she recalled that it was the outgrowth of the first World War. At that time a house was secured at Twenty-fifth and K Streets, for the college women in war work. It was maintained for four years and out of that grew the idea of the national headquarters.

Mrs. Morgan presented the plan to the biennial convention in St. Louis, Mo., in 1919, and the first headquarters was eventually opened in a handsome house at 1607 H Street, now the site of the United States Chamber of Commerce. When the property was sold for this building the clubhouse in the present location was secured.

Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the local branch, presided at the dinner and presented the national board members, headed by Dr. Margaret Morriss, of Pembroke College, the president. Mrs. James F. Irwin, chairman of international relations, presented Mrs. Morgan.

The dinner was in charge of Mrs. Maris M. Proffitt, chairman of hospitality, and Mrs. James Frederick Rogers, chairman of the dinner committee.

Home Economics Association Plans Emergency Service for National Defense

THE HOME ECONOMICS ASSOCIATION, under the leadership of its president, Meiva Bakkie, nutrition consultant for the American Red Cross, is launching a plan for an emergency service, as part of its cooperation in national defense.

Mrs. Shelby Faulkner, chairman of the emergency service, is now compiling a list of all the home economists in the District of Columbia who will be available in the event that a national emergency arises in which they can help.

Later on, according to Miss Bakkie, "refresher" courses in home economics propably will be given to those on the list who have been employed in other fields since their graduation from home economics colleges.

Heading the three main divisions of the district association this year are: Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, chairman of the social welfare and public health section; Bernice Burns, chairman of the section for women in business, and Mrs. George Patteson, chairman of the homemakers' section.

Besides the president, officers for this year are: Vice president, Mrs. Faith Rasmussen; recording secretary, Emma S. Byler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Polly K. Moore; treasurer, Mrs. Elizabeth Whiteman, and councillor, Mrs. N. R. Ellis.

HOUSE SCOUTS—Members of the Park View Women's Club who contemplate buying, building or redecorating houses this season have a corps of interior decoration scouts in their art section who are prepared to give them information on the latest trends in that field.

Yesterday Mrs. George W. Evans, chairman of the section with members of her group, visited model homes in the upper northwest section of the city. Later they expect to make other field trips to other sections, taking note especially of the treatment of walls and floor coverings, of which the section is making a special study.

HOBBY SHOW—A collection of China cats, belonging to Lillian Middleton, was one of the features of the hobby show held Wednesday at the Raleigh by Beta Chapter of Kappa Gamma Sorority. Another novel exhibit was that of caps such as old ladies wore in past eras, belonging to Ida Sisson. Eight hobbies were represented—all those of chapter members.

CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY—The seventeenth anniversary of the founding of Lambda Chi Sorority will be celebrated by the 10 local chapters at Wardman Park Hotel with a banquet and dance tomorrow night. Mrs. Frederic Holtzclaw, national president, who resides here, will be the ranking guest.

Other national officers who make their home in Washington and who will attend are Miss Elizabeth King, national recording secretary, and Miss Loretta Gardella, editor of the sorority's publication.

The Alpha Province board, governing group for the Washington chapters, is in charge of arrangements for the affair. It includes Miss Dorothy Parkhill, chairman; Miss Mary Sue Williams, vice chairman; Miss Blossom Millbrook, corresponding secretary; Miss Lois Milstead, recording secretary; Miss Mildred treasurer; Miss Anita Ryan, chaplain, sergeant at arms, and Miss Mackie Smith, publicity and editor.

Miss Elaine Bonde will be toastmistress for the banquet, to which only the active members are invited. At the dance which will follow the banquet the rushees of the chapters will be present.

Press Women Fete Refugee

Countess Helen Chlapowska and her daughter, Countess Lasocka, of the Polish Embassy, were guests of a group of newspaper women yesterday at an informal luncheon at the Willard Hotel.

Countess Chlapowska, who escaped from Poland after 19 weeks of imprisonment by the Nazis, told of her release from prison following her husband's death, being given a ticket to Warsaw where she went to the home of a cousin, still livable although damaged by by bombs, and of the warning to flee to the Italian border.

aving found kindness expressed by one or two Nazis she is convinced that not all who are forced to do Hitler's bidding are in sympathy with his regime of brutality. She declared as further proof that he has encountered opposition within his own country the fact that of 10,000 prisoners in one of the great concentration camps, 4,000 are Poles and Czechs and the remainder Germans.

Polish children who have been taken from their parents and sent to Germany are lost to their families and the country forever, she believes.

Miss Frost to Address Women's Church Group

U. S. Must Work for Peace In Pacific, Dr. Sheesholtz Says

Embassies of Reconciliation Aide Addresses Fellowship Committee At Y. W. C. A. After Tour of Orient

It is not for us today to think of the Far East—that is too far away "Dr. Anne Sheesholtz, of the Embassies of Reconciliation, told the World Fellowship Committee of the Y. W. C. A. yesterday. "We must think in terms of peace in the Pacific area and that involves China, Japan, Russia and the United States."

Japan, with its army "bogged down in China," is fearful that some hysterical incident in which its navy or that of the United States is involved, may stir this country into action, she said.

Dr. Sheesholtz, who now resides in Baltimore, visited Japan, China and the Philippines between January and May 15 this year. She was sent by the International Embassies of Reconciliation, representing the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Federal Council of Churches' department of International Justice and Good Will.

It was before the Konoye government came into power, she said, and she learned from both Japanese and Chinese officials at that time that both governments wanted to bring the armed conflict to an end. Talks were then in progress preliminary to open negotiations, she said, with the United States mentioned as an arbiter acceptable to both countries, provided it did not become involved in the European war. The other arbiter under consideration was Russia, "which has given China five times as much as the United States during the war, without any strings tied to it," said Dr. Sheesholtz. "Our country actually has aided Japan by its munitions sales more than it has helped China."

Dr. Sheesholtz made clear that she went to both countries as a missionary of friendship, rather than a research student, and was welcomed in both by personal friends made during her six years residence in the Orient. She said she explained the American attitude deploring Japan's aggression in China but was met always with the question from Japanese: "Then why does America sell us arms?"

Mrs. Albert Atwood is chairman of the world fellowship committee of the local Y. W. C. A., where Dr. Sheesholtz spoke.

D. A. R. Officers' Group to Honor Mrs. H. L. Hodgkins

Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, charter member of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, and only living founder of the District D. A. R. State Officers' Club, will be the honor guest of the club's golden jubilee celebration and annual banquet at the Mayflower Hotel on Saturday at 7:30 p. m.

Mrs. Hodgkins was a charter member of the first chapter of the D. A. R. organized in the District, chapter vice regent, State vice regent and State regent 1901-1909, recording secretary general 1911-1913; vice president general 1921-1924; elected honorary vice president general 1935. She was secretary of the National D. A. R. Relief Service committee of 1917-1919, which handled the work connected with the adoption of 3,000 French war orphans by chapters and members, sending through the treasurer general of the D. A. R. more than $135,000 for their relief.

D. C. Legion Auxiliary Plans for Navy Day

The American Legion Auxiliary of the District will participate in the Navy Day ceremonies tomorrow at 12:15 p. m. at the John Paul Jones Monument in Potomac Park.

Mrs. Helen M. McCabe, department president, will place a wreath for the department. She will be accompanied by the department color bearers, Mrs. Margaret Greenburg and Mrs. Vesta Rodruck, who will carry the colors in the procession.

Girl Reserves Open Va. Parley

Miss Grace Johnson, vice chairman of the Y. W. C. A. Girl Reserve executive committee, will preside at the Girl Reserve Advisers' Conference to be held this week-end at Vacation Lodge in Cherrydale, Va. The sessions open today at 4:30.

Miss Johnson and Miss Eleanor Roberson will report on the Advisers' Seminar which they attended at Oberlin College in June and there will be separate discussions for the advisers of junior and senior high schools led by Miss Veryl Schult, junior high, and Miss Emilie Margaret White, senior high.

After dinner and singing led by Miss Mary Burnett, there will be a panel discussion at 7:30 on "The Relationship of the Girl Reserve Club to the Y. W. C. A., the School, and the Community." The panel will include Mrs. Elva Wells, assistant principal at Roosevelt; Miss Elizabeth M. Haney, general secretary of the local Y. W. C. A., who will discuss the youth movement in the Y; Miss Pearl Carruthers, of the world's staff of the Y. W. C. A., who will present the widest scope of the work, and Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman of the Washington Housing Association.

The day will close with a worship service by a committee of advisers with Miss Roberson as the chairman and Miss Jeanette Wright, Miss Betty Smith, Miss Grace Houchen and Mrs. Helen Springman serving with her.

Discussions will resume Saturday morning at 9:30 with three leaders, Mrs. Fred Buschmeyer, a Girl Reserve mother; Miss Mabel Cook, executive secretary of Y. W. C. A. Girl Reserve Department, and Dr. Mitchell Dreese, of the psychology department of George Washington University.

Dr. Oscar Blackwelder, pastor of the Church of the Reformation, will close the conference with a talk on "Hhow we, as Girl Reserve advisers, can help to stabilize young people in a time of confusion and conflict."

Women Campaign For Merit Bill

Determined that the Seventy-Sixth Congress shall enact a "genuine" merit law before adjournment, the National League of Women Voters has launched an intensive 10-day campaign to insure passage of the Ramspeck civil service extension bill "with no patronage compromise."

Congress, the political parties, and candidates should be convinced at this time of democracy's great test that the American public no longer can tolerate the spoils system and insists that all Federal employes be chosen under a genuine merit system, Miss Marguerite M. Wells, league president, declared.

The league will carry its fight for merit and against patronage to the home districts of U. S. Representatives for ten days preceding election. League members will urge their Representatives to reverse the recent action of the House for the "crippling" Nichols quota amendment and accept the original conference committee report adopted by the Senate and then shelved by the House until after election.

Implementing the campaign the league yesterday distributed throughout the Nation House and Senate roll call records on the Ramspeck bill and amendments with interpretations of Congressmen's votes as for or against the spoils ystem.

Capital News In Brief

Firemen Save 200 Rabbits, Pigs

While 200 rabbits and pigs, housed in the North Building of the Department of Agriculture, grunted and squealed in alarm, firemen last night chopped through the roof to stifle a blaze in an attic space directly above them.

The animals, on hand for experimental purposes, were alarmed by smoke. They suffered no ill effects.

Fire-fighters, however, spent two and a half hours at the scene, searching out the hidden blaze, then stifling it. A crowd of 500 gathered as the firemen raised aerial ladders.

U. S. Owes Him Dime, But He Won't Bother

The War Department yesterday ordered Capt. George Carl Updegraff, Infantry Reserve, to duty in the office of the Chief of the Air Corps here and noted, "the travel directed is necessary in the military service." Bus fare from his home to Washington is a dime.

"But," said Capt. Updegraff last night, "I don't think I'll put in a voucher for that."

Split Switch Ties Up Trolley Traffic in Area

A Kenilworth street car split a switch at Fifteenth and New York Avenue yesterday, causing a minor traffic accident and tying up 23 street cars for ten minutes.

Heading east at the intersection, the car went half-way through the switch when the rear truck split it sending the rear of the car swerving to the right and striking a truck.

Damage was slight, and no one was hurt. However, all street cars on Fifteenth Street, Pennsylvania Avenue and G Street were tied up until the truck was extricated from its wedged position and the street car was taken to the barn.

Funds Sought For D. C. Housing

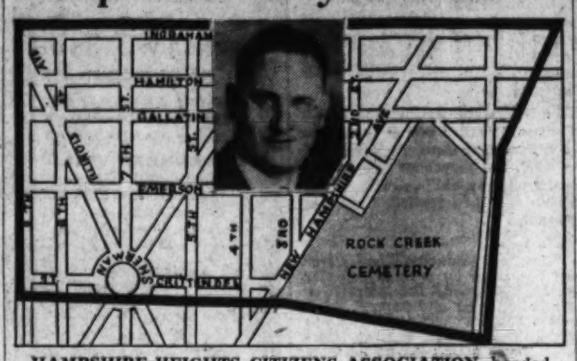
The District Housing Authority November 1 will seek bids on $4,500,000 of short term notes maturing May 15, 1941, to finance its projects here.

This loan is part of $73,960,000 to be sought the same day by 16 local housing authorities in as many cities and $70,141,000 in notes to be offered November 8 by 26 local authorities, making a total of $144,121,000 in 42 cities. Since November, 1939, the Federal Works Agency announced, a total of $402,000,000 of such notes has been issued by local authorities, some of which already have matured and been paid.

By issuing these notes, the FWA pointed out, local housing authorities save interest to the USHA for long time project loans.

Working for Washington

Hampshire Heights Citizens' Group Founded by Policeman



HAMPSHIRE HEIGHTS CITIZENS ASSOCIATION, headed by Harry J. Miller (inset), works for this section of Washington

Community's Population, Now 6,000, Has More Than Doubled in 6 Years; Most of Residents Own Their Homes

WORKING FOR WASHINGTON—This is the twenty-sixth article in a series about citizens' associations in the District and their efforts to make the community a better place in which to live.

Six years have more than doubled the population of the east Washington community of Hampshire Heights to its present high of 6,000 residents. And two of those years have developed the Hampshire Heights Citizens Association from merely an idea to one of the most active associations in the city.

Strictly a young community and inhabited largely by young couples, Hampshire Heights owes much of its neighborly spirit and recent well-planned development to the fast-growing citizens unit.

Interests of the association, which has belonged to the Federation of Citizens Associations since last December, vary widely. Aside from backing wholeheartedly efforts to obtain suffrage for the District, it has been active in public utilities, taxation, health, recreation, streets, sidewalks, mail and other problems in the community.

President of the organization is Harry J. Miller, former member of the active publicity committee, who succeeds Harold Duncan Johnson. Johnson, a policeman, conceived the idea of forming the association and was its first president.

He has definite ideas about the superior future development of the neighborhood. For instance, "We are a planned community, even to our shopping center. In the center we have the only business development the area needs or ever will have. It contains 13 shops and stores and provides for the business needs of the neighborhood."

The development of Hampshire Heights, according to President Miller, can be traced directly to opening up of New Hampshire Avenue through to Maryland some five years ago. Most residents live in their own six-room houses, although the community has one large cooperative apartment house and 15 apartment buildings.

As in most young communities, residents are mostly young married couples—the majority of them with one child. There is one school, Barnard elementary, Fourth and Decatur Streets Northwest, with another now under construction and one section completed.

Meetings of the unit are held in the Barnard School on the fourth Tuesday of each month. Members also issue a monthly publication, The Chronical, with notices, neighborhood news and community editorials.

Association officers are Harry J. Miller, president; J. Leon Bord, first vice president; Mrs. E. C. Atkinson, second vice president; Mrs. Harry Kriemelmeyer, secretary, and Walter J. Snellings, treasurer.

Czech Pilots Credited With 200 Nazi Planes

Vladimir Hurban, the Czecho-Slovakian minister, said yesterday that the Czecho-Slovakian people had received two "birthday presents" as a prelude to their celebration of the nation's Independence Day on October 28.

The minister received the good news in two telegrams:

From London the Czecho-Slovakian government in exile notified him that Czecho-Slovakian fliers with the Royal Air Force had, since the beginning of the aerial struggle over England, shot down 200 German planes, while losing only 19.

From Montreal the Czecho-Slovakian consul general reported that Canada had recognized the government in exile.

Senate Gets Bill Aimed at Curbing Panders in Capital

Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, yesterday introduced the bill requested by United States Attorney Edward M. Curran to stop pandering in Washington. He indicated that the legislation will be considered immediately after the Congressional recess.

The bill proposes a penalty of up to five years' imprisonment or a maximum fine of $1,000 for the offense.

Designed to plub a loophole in the present criminal code, the measure is an outgrowth of a test case decided several months ago by Justice James M. Proctor in United State District Court when he directed an acquittal of Abraham Blum, a waiter, charged with soliciting for a girl in Jimmy Lake's night club.

Child Aid Group to Ask More Funds

Youth Association Plans Fight on Commercial Adoption Agencies

As a step toward displacing commercial adoption agencies in the District and meeting other lacks in foster family care, the Children's Protective Association will seek a substantial increase in its funds from the Community Chest for next year, it was disclosed at the association's annual meeting yesterday.

"You have read in the papers about the commercial adoption agencies that now handle most of the placements made in Washington. There is much talk of 'babies for sale' and much justified criticism of disposing of babies that way," Miss Mildred Terrett, executive secretary of the association, pointed out in her annual report at the meeting.

"The board of this agency has been very active in trying to get such legislation in the District that these commercial agencies may no longer function.

"But if they cease to function, it is certainly up to us noncommercial children's agencies to offer another and a better service to take their place," she said.

The board of the Children's Protective Association has approved the inclusion of a placement service in its program, "if and when the Chest is able to provide us with the additional boarding funds that we would need," she said.

"Meanwhile we are actually beginning to do it on a very small scale. We have a register of would-be adoptive parents, we have told the Florence Crittenton Home that we will place for adoption the babies born there for whom this is needed, and we are at present working on three placements for adoption," Miss Terrett explained.

Officials of the association conferred yesterday with representatives from the Chest's budget committee on the request for the increase, to add several workers to the staff and to expand funds used for foster family care.

In her report of the year's work, Miss Terrett said the association's five field workers have given a protective and preventive case work service to 680 children. In addition, the staff has given consultation service on the needs of 500 other children.

For lack of a larger staff, the association has rejected about eight cases a month "whom we ought to have accepted," she said.

If the staff can be enlarged in the future, it will "resume sending to the public schools each year an invitation to refer to us the school children whom the teachers know to have social problems. This is particularly important in Washington because we are unusual in having no group of social workers in our public school system," she added.

About one-third of the children are referred to the association because they "are misbehaving in ways and to a degree that makes their parents feel unable to handle them," Miss Terrett said.

Curley Club Frolics At Halloween Party

Two hundred members of the Curley Club last night joined in a Halloween party and dance at the Continental Hotel. Arrangements were made for presentation of three one-act plays in St. Patrick's Hall, Tenth and G Streets Northwest, November 7; and for a card party at the Wardman Park November 20.

New Royalty Is Crowned

Nancy Shenk, 17, Chosen to Reign as Queen Of North Washington Halloween Festival

AT CORONATION—Nancy Shenk, 17-year-old dentist's assistant, was crowned Queen of Halloween last night by the North Washington Halloween committee in Roosevelt High School. She is surrounded by Ruth Smallman, Anita Marcure, Betty Atkinson and June Fontaine

Halloween high spirits of hundreds of youngsters found an outlet, in advance, last night in applause and cheers for a queen of the North Washington celebration.

Seventeen-year-old Nancy Shenk, of 1360 Fairmont Street Northwest, entry of Twin Oaks Playground and, in working hours, a dental assistant, was chosen and crowned at a fiesta in Roosevelt High School auditorium.

She will be star of a Halloween parade in that section next Thursday night, in the new decentralization of the District's celebration. But in advance of that spotlight, she will bask in the glitter of the diamond ring donated by a jewelry company for presentation last night.

Thirty-two girls paraded across the stage before the judges singled out the queen and the members of her court. Then Nancy, wearing a bright red dress and matching hair ribbon, ascended a gilded throne to receive the crown from M. C. Schwartz, past president of the Park View Business Men's Association and general chairman of the North Washington Halloween committee.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent, Metropolitan Police, watched the lively celebration from the front row, while his wife acted as one of the judges. At times the enthusiasm of the crowd drowned out the voice of the master of ceremonies, Jim McGrath. But he managed to start the crowd singing in order to dispel some of the impatience while awaiting the judges' decision.

The girls chosen as ladies-in-waiting were Ruth Smallman, Anita Marcure, Betty Atkinson and June Fontana. Others selected for the court were Marjorie Elsey, Betty Burak, Shirley Applebaum, Doris Wayland, Lois MacDonald, Dorothy Barron, Louise Reid and Claire Porter.

Judges, in addition to Mrs. Brown, were Dillard C. Rogers, Mary Mason, Theodore S. Grape and Mrs. Clarice Smith.

B. J. Kroger, president of the Park View Citizens Association, is chairman of the ways and means committee of the Halloween program; R. T. Haugh, president of Macfarland Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association, parade chairman; Miss Margaret Carmody, of Roosevelt-Macfarland Community Center, chairman of decorations committee; B. F. Burgess, chairman of prize committee. The Halloween queen committee is composed of Mrs. Mary Heald, Mrs. Adelaide Irving and Mrs. E. E. Atkinson.

Harry McAlpin Reinstated, Pending Study

Temporary reinstatement of Harry S. McAlpin as supervising interviewer of the District Employment Center was ordered yesterday by Paul V. McNutt, Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, pending his personal review of McAlpin's dismissal with an unsatisfactory rating last July.

The dismissal was protested originally by various colored organizations, including the Urban League, the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, the Negro Congress, and the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance. Protests were based on the assumption that McAlpin was dismissed because he attempted to enlarge work opportunities for colored job-seekers.

Administrator McNutt promised an impartial review of the case. A special committee, on which Joel Gordon represented McAlpin, took testimony in the case for six days, on which they deliberated six weeks, and finally rendered a majority decision favoring McAlpin's reinstatement.

Oscar M. Powell, executive director of the Social Security Board, disregarded this decision, and ordered the unsatisfactory rating and dismissal to stand. This act was protested to Administrator McNutt Wednesday by two delegations, one from the United Federal Workers, and another representing colored organizations.

Administrator McNutt, who was compelled to leave the city with the President, referred the question of the legality of a reinstatement prior to a final decision to the office of the general counsel of the Social Security Board, Wayne Coy, representing the administrator, yesterday notified heads of the various delegations that McAlpin would be reinstated temporarily as soon as papers could be prepared, presumably within two days.

Judge Decides Nude Dancer Showed Poor Form

A blonde and a brunette yesterday convinced Judge Walter Casey at police court that their strip-tease dance was an art within the pale of the law, but a red-head had to pay a fine for dancing in the nude.

A courtroom packed—with men only—including 200 who had been arrested with the dancers when the police raided a show Wednesday night at the Pythian Temple, 1016 Ninth Street Northwest — heard Charles E. Ford, attorney assigned to the defense, win freedom for two of the entertainers. The third, Rita Carben, 27, of Pittsburgh, paid $50. The girls were to have received $5 for the dance, according to testimony.

The 200 dance spectators, each of whom had put up $2 at the stationhouse the night before, were released. Charged with conducting an indecent performance, Percy Graves, 38, of 303 Thirteenth Street Southeast, and Herbert M. Dickerson, 44, of 114 Seventeenth Street Southeast, pleaded not guilty. They were released on $500 bond after they had requested a jury trial.

For Absentee Voters

Marine Corps Officers to See Guard Exhibit

Twenty-six Marine Corps officers, members of a special weapons class at the Marine base, Quantico, Va., will come to Washington at 11 a. m. today to inspect the National Guard exhibit of mechanized equipment at the automobile show in Riverside Stadium.

The exhibit includes one of the Guard's new prime movers, a mobile field repair shop and a 3-inch anti-aircraft gun.

District officials and members of the Traffic Advisory Council were taken on a special tour of the show last night to inspect new safety features of the 1941 automobile models.

The visitors were shown in detail the workings of the dual braking system installed in one make of car to provide a second set of brakes in event of failure of the first set. They also were shown light signaling devices devised by other manufacturers and the contrivances other car makers have designed to prevent blow-out accidents.

Fort Davis Stands Firm On Bus Issue

Compromise Offers Of 2 Transit Firms Rejected; P. U. C. Sets Nov. 5 Hearing

Fort Davis Citizens Association last night took a firm stand against compromise proposals offered thus far to solve the transportation problem in the area.

The area is serviced by two transit companies and under the present system must pay two fares if the ride is beyond downtown Washington. Several hearings have been held by the Public Utilities Commission and another is scheduled for November 5. The organization voted to seek universal transfers, continuance of express service to Eleventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, and regular city fares.

The association also urged the Commissioners to retain in the 1942 budget an appropriation for purchase of a school site at Pennsylvania and Alabama Avenues Southeast. A similar appropriation, the resolution pointed out, was slashed by the Commissioners in the 1940 and 1941 budgets.

The National Capital Parks office was requested to take measures in Fort Dupont Park to prevent the washing out of S Street and Texas Avenue below it, following heavy rains. The unit also urged Congress to remove restrictions against reopening of the District testing laboratory.

Frank B. Randolph, of Bradbury Heights Citizens Association, was principal speaker. It was announced that the association membership had risen to 114.

Conduit Road

Plans for a Halloween celebration Thursday night, to be sponsored by the Conduit Road Citizens Association, the Parent-Teacher Association and Potomac Post, No. 40, American Legion, were arranged by the citizens association last night at Palisades Field House.

A queen will be chosen, a parade will be held, games and a weiner roast for children will be followed by a party for older residents of the community.

The association decided to ask larger buses on lines serving the area and to ask the District Commissioners to investigate the possibility of requiring streetcar tracks at Dupont Circle to be relaid so cars would move with instead of against traffic. A resolution was adopted requesting a traffic light at Thirty-fifth Street and Reservoir Road.

Lutheran Young People Told Spirit of Old Christian Heroes Bids Them 'Sail On'

FIFTH ANNUAL DINNER—Dr. Charles B. Foelsch, new pastor of the Luther Place Memorial Church, last night addressed the fifth Young People's Fellowship dinner in the parish hall. Left to right—Dr. Carl Folkemer, assistant pastor; Ruth Morgenthall, Dr. Charles B. Foelsch and Clayton Warnson, toastmaster and president of the fellowship

A consciousness that we share the spiritual adventures of Christian heroes of the past is a good reason for "sailing on" in the face of today's crucial times, Dr. Charles B. Foelsch said last night at Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle.

Dr. Foelsch, who became new pastor several weeks ago, was selected as "captain" to address the fifth annual nautically themed Young People's Fellowship dinner in the parish hall, and scored a big hit with the "crew."

Mingling in an atmosphere of a blinking paper lighthouse lamp, model boats, candy life savers and ship lanterns, the young people were told that the heroes in one's soul are a great source of power for "sailing on" and were urged to be "good sailors" under the "one great captain, Jesus Christ."

The new clergyman, formerly pastor of Zion Lutheran Church of Sunbury, Pa., is renowned throughout the United Lutheran Church as a youth leader, having addressed several summer conferences, both denominational and interdenominational.

He was introduced by "Navigator" Clayton Wornson, president of the Young People's Fellowship Council, which coordinates all young people's work in the congregation. It was organized about four years ago.

Miss Mary Sue Moore, youthful soloist, so charmed the members with her voice that she got called back for three encores. She was accompanied by Marjorie Height. The Rev. Carl Folkemer, assistant pastor, and "first mate" of the ship YPF, gave the invocation and benediction. Lawrence B. Pedersen was banquet chairman. Miss Ann Burger was music program chairman.

'Kit Carson,' at Capitol, Celebrates an Heroic Era

Western Thriller Boasts an Historical Touch And a Bit of Authentic and Vivid Biography; The Lathrops and Miss Lee Top Stage Revue

"KIT CARSON." Edward Small's picturization for United Artists of a story by Evelyn Wells, adapted to the screen by George Bruce, costarring Jon Hall and Lynn Bari, with Dana Andrews, Harold Huber, Ward Bond, Renie Riano, Clayton Moore, Rowena Cook, Raymond Hatton, Harry Strang, C. Henry Gordon and Lew Merrill. Directed by George B. Seitz. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

FOLLOWING THE NEW HOLLYWOOD PATTERN for super-Westerns, "Kit Carson," the new feature unveiled yesterday at Loew's Capitol Theater, combines as blood-thirsty a tale of Indian fighting as the most sanguinary appetite could crave with authentic elements of biography and pioneer history on the vast plains and towering mountains that lie between Kansas and California. Just as "Brigham Young" pictured the career of the Mormon elder of that name and "The Westerner" sketchily unfolded the humorously despotic reign of Judge Roy Bean, in Texas, so does "Kit Carson" trace its titular figure's contributions to the early Union of the States.

BELL

In its early sequences, this wild-and-woolly, shoot-'em-up subject is as tempestuously gory as the wildest of the old Kalem silent single and double-reelers that used to have Indians biting the dust until there were no more Indians and no dust left. After the plainsman, later commissioned Chief of Scouts of the United States Army, meets up with Capt. John C. Fremont and his detachment of troops at Fort Bridger—an outpost also celebrated in "Brigham Young"—and aids him in blazing the shortest trail to California, the film becomes more historical than fictional, with a multiplication, rather than subtraction of hair-raising incidents.

The Shoshones are on the war path and Gen. Castro, ambitious to add California to Mexico and gain for himself the dictatorship of the entire territory, is supplying them with Spanish rifles and ammunition and prodding them into murderous fury. Carson, who starts out as wagonmaster of the caravan of settlers bound West in the wake of Fremont's meager "army," never makes a mistake in his estimate of where the greatest danger lies or in the manner in which it may best be met. He takes the valiant band through some pretty ticklish situations with the loss of as few scalps as possible. He also falls in love with Dolores Murphy, daughter of a wealthy Californian, who first falls in love with Fremont.

There is high excitement and more than a little exaltation in the heroism of those rugged pioneers who set up the State of California, give it a flag and then outmaneuver Castro, and lick the pants off him and his overstuffed soldiery, to add it to the Union. When Carson and his two pals, Ape and Lopez, stage a three-man defense of the Murphy hacienda against the Castro hordes, the spine does funny things! This is the climactic episode that pales into insignificance the long string of Indian skirmishes that have gone before—and some of them, even, take on something of the sublime grandeur of Custer's last stand.

There are no great names in the cast of "Kit Carson," but there are, nevertheless, many substantial and convincingly drawn characterizations. Foremost among these is the performance of Jon Hall in the title role. Hall's Kit Carson is an amiable but grim young man, to whom scouting comes natural and romance hard. His portrayal is perfectly sustained and never once will remind you of his showier part in "The Hurricane," in which he first came to prominence. Dana Andrews' impersonation of Fremont is agreeable, if possibly a little too suave, and C. Henry Gordon makes as obnoxious a Castro as the circumstances demand. Three outstanding character roles are handsomely played—with a judicious sprinkling of comedy, by the way—by Ward Bond, as Ape; Harold Huber, as the gaily unconcerned Lopez, and Raymond Hatton, in the brief part of Jim Bridger. Lynn Bari, the Dolores, like Mr. Andrews, is a bit too genteel to fit perfectly into the panorama of the turbulent life of the Indian country, but makes the most of her romantic moments, with both Fremont and Carson.

The "Off the Boat" stage revue, introduces four diversified acts in the sopranoing of Madelyn Killeen, the extraordinary juggling of Bobby May—who keeps one more of everything going in the air than any of his dexterous craft you ever have seen—the mildly amusing cross-fires of Al Stone and Letitia Lee and the incomparable tap dancing of the Lathrop Brothers and Virginia Lee. For this department's money, the Lathrops and Miss Lee are the undisputed headliners of the bill. They have been doing the same act for years, but it still is the best of its kind extant.

Appears as the Phonetic Eliza

RUTH CHATTERTON

who returns to the city of her career's beginning on Monday night, in the role of Eliza Doolittle in George Bernard Shaw's comedy of "Pygmalion," next attraction at the National Theater. Miss Chatterton, always a Washington favorite, has not been seen on a local stage for too many seasons

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 25 (INS).—Joan Blondell will be the well dressed, wisecracking "ghost" in "Topper Returns," after closing the deal with Hal Roach today. For awhile I had begun to think that this role was really out of this world. Every femme star mentioned for it seemed to disappear as completely as Thorne Smith's original heroine. Connie Bennett, who has made most of the "Toppers" went to Reno for her divorce—and Rosalind Russell begged off because she needed a rest.

PARSONS

News just as interesting about "Topper Returns" is that Joan Bennett will be in Hollywood Monday to sign for the romantic lead when, and if, she gets together with Hal about the way the picture is advertised. There was a grand row before when Joan objected to the exploitation on "The Housekeeper's Daughter." Now she's demanding the right to pass on the copy and Hal is willing if she will agree to a referee. Of course, the two Joans will share costarring billing.

The wandering boy is home at last, which is another way of saying that George Sanders, after two and a half years of being loaned out, is going to make a picture on his home lot—Twentieth Century-Fox. "Uncensored" is the title of the home-coming picture for this popular actor and he will be starred in it. Sanders signed his Fox contract three and a half years ago, but he hasn't made a picture there since "Lancer Spy," which was filmed more than two years ago.

M-G-M is going to do better by Frank Morgan than "Hullabaloo," which, judging from the reviews, won't sweep the Academy Awards this year. They've just about purchased "Vanishing Virginian." Rebecca William's much discussed new novel for him at a fancy price.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Mickey Rooney was beaming from ear to ear when he walked in Ella Campbell's with Linda Darnell on his arm. Well, at that, Linda is one of the few girls in Hollywood younger than the 19-year-old man-about-town; Bob (Willkie) Montgomery and Helen (Roosevelt) Gahagan flew to New York on the same plane; Kay Feltus will become Mrs. Robert Preston some time during the holidays. She's wearing an engagement ring that big.

Barton MacLane's two sisters are planning a double wedding in November and he is building a home for each of them: the dancers at the "Folies Bergere" almost broke a leg playing to Fred Astaire, who was in the front row last night; Sylvia Slote is Wally Beery's favorite blonde now. They were at the Brown Derby together; Victor Mature saw Betty Grable off to Chicago last night; W. C. Fields suffering from the flu is heading for Sobobà Hot Springs.

Remember Helen Twelvetress? She's doing very well for herself on the radio in New York; Walt Disney's "Fantasia" opens in New York November 13 and it is already a sellout; Patric Knowles has been made instruction chief in the Royal Canadian Air Force and his wife and baby are joining him at Moosejaw, Canada; Kay Kyser gave Dave Butler the best looking gold watch in town when they finished "You'll Find Out."

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.

GIFT: Ruby Black, the newspaper woman who wrote the new biography of Eleanor Roosevelt, presented a copy of the book to President Roosevelt at the White House. The book includes a quotation from Westbrook Pegler: "I think we can take the wraps off, and call her the greatest American woman" . . . When Ruby delivered the book to the President, she told him: "I don't know whether you will find anything new in it, but some others will" . . . "You never can tell," said the President, "I never know what goes on in those press conferences." He glanced at the table of contents and started to laugh—for he had come upon the title of Chapter Eleven, which he proceeded to read aloud, slowly, carefully . . . "God's Gift to Newspaper Women."

LYONS

QUERY: Clifford Odets, who is in Hollywood writing the movie adaptation of the anti-Nazi story, "Flotsam," worked late at the studio last week and then went alone to a delicatessen store on Hollywood Boulevard . . . In the midst of his meal, the proprietor approached Odets' table and asked, proudly: "Good food here, eh?" . . . The social-conscious playwright stared at the man and then replied: "Are you talking locally, nationally or internationally?"

REALISM: After the premiere of "George Washington Slept Here" George S. Kaufman was interviewed backstage by a radio reporter for Stage magazine. "The rain effect looks genuine," the interviewer said. "How do you do it?" . . . "I stand backstage and pump," Kaufman replied, "and then you know what happens? The water drops down just like rain. It's really ingenious" . . . The startled interviewer, still holding the microphone, then asked: "That offstage noise of well-drilling . . . is that done in an ingenious way, too?" . . . "Yes," Kaufman assured. "You see, we have a real well backstage and we drill and drill there" . . . "How long do you drill?" was the final question . . . "Until we strike oil," said Kaufman, "and then we'll close the show."

LOSS: Dorothy Holder, who was the widow of Enrico Caruso, still is in Cannes, living in the home of Dickie Fellowes-Gordon . . . She reports that she's lost 40 pounds in an unusual reduction process. She lost that weight tilling the soil and working the land—for food.

WORRY: Bill Farnsworth, the veteran sports writer and promoter, hasn't been well of late and went to see a psychoanalyst . . . Farnsworth submitted to the usual first treatment and then was told by the psychoanalyst: "The most important thing right now is that you're not to worry. Remember, don't do anything that will worry you" . . . Farnsworth heeded that advice immediately. He walked out—without paying.

CHATTER: Charlie Chaplin, in discussing the final speech he makes in "The Dictator"—the message which was criticized by the film reviewers—said: "To me that speech is the most important thing in the picture. Even if I knew that it meant the difference between a hit and a flop, I'd insist on keeping that speech in the picture" . . . Bosley Crowther of the N. Y. Times will be the new president of the New York Film Critics Circle . . . Madge Bellamy will join the Block & Sully road tour of "See My Lawyer" in Detroit . . . Mayor LaGuardia's next broadcast will be called "Willkie vs. Willkie."

DEBATE: Melvyn Douglas and Robert Benchley were guests at a house party, and immediately went to a corner and started debating. Donald Ogden Stewart joined them, just to listen—and discovered that they were debating about Clemenceau and the work he had done at Versailles . . . "Douglas, it's too late," Stewart told the actor—who asked; "Too late for what?" . . . "The only Douglas debate which will be remembered," said Stewart, "is the one against Lincoln."

CRIME: Swifty Morgan—who once threw B. B. shot, through his teeth, into the hair of the unsuspecting Prince of Wales, and convinced him to go downstairs and wash his hair as a cure—was in Lindy's, relating his experiences in Paris . . . Swifty, who now sells ties of his own make, then was introduced to District Attorney O'Dwyer, and offered to sell him some ties . . . The prosecutor stared coldly at Morgan—who explained: "I'm legitimate now. The only place where I'm wanted is Paris, and the cops there are now too busy to worry about me."

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Oct. 24.

Now that Jackie Cooper is going about with Bonita Granville, and goes into "The Ziegfeld Girl" opposite Judy Garland, the gossipers are beginning to predict that there'll be heartbreak ahead for Bonita, which is all a lot of hooey. We've had our fun with publicized romances. It's been overdone—even the public knows when it's the real thing and when it's been whipped up to put over a newcomer. But when it concerns kids, I think we should mind our own business, and let them have a little fun. Why shouldn't Mickey Rooney, June Preisser, Ann Rutherford, Deanna Durbin, Kathryn Grayson, Susanna Foster, Freddie Bartholomew have a good time? And if they want to dance to good music at a night club, why is it anybody's business but their own?

HOPPER

When our kids were growing up, during school vacations we arranged their parties for them. We'd take another table at the Grove, so we could be there when the check was presented. We encouraged contacts. So let's stop whipping up romances when they're still in their teens.

Shirley Temple's deal with MGM is not signed yet. The hitch, as you might expect, is money . . . And since that publicized report that there were only 18 refugees working, as of August 31, it's interesting to know that Metro hired six foreign writers last week—all working on original stories — and they're English . . . Charlie Winninger has signed a straight three-year contract with Metro.

Norman Taurog, who directed "Boys Town," is on his way to that interesting home in Nebraska, getting more color for the sequel to "Boys Town," which will again star Spencer Tracy and Mickey Rooney.

While Virginia Bruce and John Howard were doing a hot love scene on a grassy plot under a prop tree for "Invisible Woman," Virginia let out a yap and screamed, "Something bit me!" Upon investigation, they discovered she had been "bitten" by a tack embedded in the artificial grass.

Cute casting—C. Aubrey Smith plays a butler to Ann Sothern in "Maisie was a Lady."

Sad but true—four days after her insurance ran out, Janet Gaynor had a diamond bracelet and ring stolen.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

We are taking as our topic this morning the familiar bleat that college football is not as potent or spectacular as the professional variety, and we are wondering if the college boys aren't taking something of a bum rap in the argument.

POVICH

By this time it is sort of accepted that the pros, as a class, do play better football, that they score more touchdowns and that they don't bore the customers with the safe-and-sane stuff on the field. But perhaps the shortcomings of college football aren't completely the fault of the college football players. They've been hog-tied, in a degree, by the college rules makers.

The college rules pooh-bahs haven't seen fit yet to adopt the rule that permits the pros to throw a forward pass from any point behind the scrimmage line. The college boys are still fettered by the rule that forbids 'em to throw a forward pass unless they are 5 yards behind the line of scrimmage. That may seem to be an innocuous sort of rule, offering no great handicap to the college boys, but the fact is that it is far-reaching.

The rule doesn't stop with its effects on the collegians' forward-passing game. Its chief effects are probably felt by the college boys' running attack. The rule does not apply strictly to the common conception of a forward pass—the heave down field. It covers any sort of forward handling of the ball and, to quote our friend Shakespeare—ay, there's the rub.

On their reverses, their spinners, even their fake reverses, a good chance of which take place at a point within 5 yards of the scrimmage line, the college boys cannot practice the deception which the pros have exploited. Because dat old Debbil of a rule comes up again. They can't transfer the ball to any back who happens to be in front of 'em. Because that, my chums, is a forward pass even if the ball travels only 6 inches. The college boys must shove that ball backward.

The pros, unbothered by any such rule, pass the ball forward or backward. The man getting the ball doesn't have to run to the rear of the back who took it from center. Thus he can cut in sharply and hit positions between the tackles that are virtually closed to the collegians on anything except straight line plays. The college boy must go outside the tackles as a rule or hit the ends because of the wider arc he is forced to run in, and the play, in a sense, is always tipped off.

Let the college boys have the latitude of passing the ball forward on running plays and they, too, would be more spectacular. The ten coaches of the pro league have exploited the rule in their favor to a terrific degree, but suppose that rule were put in the hands, also, of the 300 college coaches in the land and the thousands of high school coaches. There are some pretty good football minds among that group, too, and they'd be apt to come up with something on the spectacular side.

But the colleges probably won't change their rule on the forward-handling of the ball. They don't want to get away from the safe-and-sane stuff, because that would encourage breaks of the game. It's the coaches of the big colleges who recommend the rules anyway. And they don't want games decided on breaks. It might cost 'em their job. They want their material, not the breaks, to decide games. The big-shot coaches are better able to get their hands on the better material and they want their material to win for 'em.

That's why the brass hats on the rules committee ruled out the touchdown on a gallop with a recovered fumble more than a decade ago. They didn't want their teams upset by an under-dog eleven that happened to be alert enough to seize a free ball and scamper with it. That happened when Georgetown's 1929 team beat Chick Meehan's New York U. team, 7 to 2. Ken Provincial picked up a fumble in the mud and galloped 87 yards with it for the only touchdown of the game.

At the end of the season, the rules committee went into action and ruled out the sprints with fumbles. They threw a sop to the alert teams by approving a gallop with a fumble if the ball was caught in mid-air, but otherwise the ball became dead at the point of recovery.

The pros haven't bothered the old fumble rule. They still put a premium on alertness and are willing to take their chances with loose balls. A sprint with a fumble is still a spectator thrill that is denied college fans. One reason the pros haven't trifled with the rule, probably, is the fact that pro coaches are not fired with the same rapidity of college coaches if the breaks of the game go against 'em. Professional club owners are more level-headed than college alumni.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 24.—With a minimum of fanfare, Georgetown University has erected itself a winning streak that may be well remembered in the future, whenever the other great winning streaks of football are discussed. As yet it doesn't deserve to be classed with the 50-odd straight games without a loss, set by Michigan in its early "point a minute" days. Or the long prewar streak of the University of Washington, or the skein of the Yales of 1881 through 1884. Nevertheless:

CONSIDINE

Georgetown has won 19 and tied one in its past 20 games. It hasn't lost since Maryland beat it in 1937. It is about the best streak any major United States college club has turned in since Rockne's last great Notre Dame team went through 1929 and 1930 without dropping one.

Jack Hagerty's hard-hitting, aggressive and versatile club should extend its streak to 21 without a loss, Saturday against N. Y. U., make it 22 in a row against Syracuse November 2, and 23 against Maryland November 9. Then comes Boston College at Boston. The team is convinced that it can make this difficult grade. And if it does, and the various bowl committees pass it up again, they will be missing an opportunity that may not come their way again for years.

Teams just don't go through three unbeaten years in these days of furious college competition, wherein setups are being weeded out of the schedule patch of good teams more and more each year.

The Hoyas began their crusade against defeat at the start of the 1938 season, routing three quick pushovers, Hampden Sidney, 51-0; Roanoke College, 33-6, and Randolph-Macon, 33-0. But then Georgetown nosed out a tough Manhattan Club, 14-13; beat Temple, 13-0; Bucknell, 13-0; West Virginia, 14-0, and Maryland, 14-7. Starting the harder 1939 season, the team beat Temple, 3-2; Roanoke, 25-0, was tied by Syracuse, 13-13; beat Bucknell, 13-7; George Washington, 7-0; West Virginia, 14-0; Maryland, 20-0, and N. Y. U., 14-0. This year the team has walloped Roanoke, 66-0; Temple, 14-0; Waynesburg, 26-12, almost a sleeper, and Virginia Poly, 46-4. That's 446 points to the opposition's 64.

The opposition, on the whole, has been less than first class. But the Hoyas have done all that was asked of them. They have licked the schedules the school got for them and can't be condemned as inferior to teams they'll not play. Their dazed victims say they are the most under-rated club in the country. Temple, which beat Michigan State (which beat Purdue and gave Michigan a gruelling day) says the Georgetown line is the best it has ever seen. Georgetown shut out Temple this year; Boston College beat the Owls, 33-20.

Hagerty had a little trouble keeping the team hopped up through its second unbeaten year. A field goal by Augie Lio beat Temple in the last few minutes of the game last year, and a climax run by Lou Ghecas at the end of the Syracuse game gave the Hilltoppers their tie. But this year, halfway through its third unbeaten season, the club is relaxed. Almost too much so to suit Hagerty. He is having trouble getting his club to concentrate on any team except Boston College.

The team has remained almost intact since its freshman year. As sophomores it gave Georgetown the school's first unbeaten club in 65 years of football. As juniors it was an even better unit, though tied once. Now the ambition of the players is to finish out their senior year unbeaten. As freshmen they were unbeaten, also, and two of the boys on the team went through four years of high school without being on the losing side. Only three regulars graduated off Hagerty's big squad last June. He lost two others, Bob Kercher, a fine end, and Ed Kowalski, a tackle, through scholastic ineligibility—for Georgetown is one of those curious, archaic institutions which insists that its football players also study.

The line goes well over 200. In Ghecas, the backfield has an incredibly rugged little guy. Jack Doolan, a sophomore back who broke into this fundamentally senior group, was interscholastic 60-yard sprint champion, but he isn't brittle like most of those speedsters. Julius Koshlap is an ambidextrous forward passer who lets the ball fly from whichever side is free. Bill Wixted, senior end, is 6 feet 4 inches and weighs 210 pounds. Allen Matuza, the center, is so good the Greenbay Packers drafted him last year, on the assumption that he was a senior.

Apprised of all these awesome facts, Dr. Mal Stevens, coach of New York University, sighed delicately and said, "Well . . . we'll show up, anyway. I sit on the bench; they can't hurt me!"

Clemson Tigers Conquer South Carolina, 21-13

20,000 Fans See Bitter Grid Battle

Gamecocks Fight Back; Tigers Score Early; Blalock Tallies Touchdown

By the Associated Press

Columbia, S. C., Oct. 24.—The potent Clemson Tigers conquered the South Carolina Gamecocks today in the thirty-seventh renewal of their colorful gridiron rivalry but they came out ahead by 21-13 only after a bitter, grueling struggle that thrilled a capacity crowd of 22,000.

Fighting courageously against odds, the Gamecocks refused to yield and came back after they were far behind to furnish the offensive fireworks on two lightning scoring plays.

Flashing their power and finesse as soon as they got the ball, the Tigers marched 65 yards on smashing reverses and two smartly executed passes to score five minutes after the opening whistle. George Floyd went the final 5 yards around left end after taking a reverse from Charlie Timmons, who converted the extra point from placement.

Blalock Scores Second Touchdown

All-Southern End Joe Blalock went over for the second Clemson touchdown in the second period after a desperate Gamecock pass by Dewitt Arrowsmith in his own end zone was intercepted by Charlie Wright and returned to the 15. Blalock raced over four plays later from the 7-yard line on his favorite end-around play and Timmons again kicked the goal to make the score Clemson 14, Carolina 0, but the real fun began.

Two minutes after the second half kick-off, Booty Payne, star Clemson sophomore, punted 40 yards to Arrowsmith on the Carolina 25. The Gamecock fullback reversed the ball to Al Grygo, who dashed like a streak to the east sideline after two blockers cleared out the Clemson punt covers. The fast-stepping Gamecock flash hugged the sideline and scored with ease. The sensational play, good for 75 yards, set the stands wild.

The undaunted Tigers struck back a short time later for their third touchdown after Wright intercepted another pass at the 46 and lateraled to Payne, who sped to the 15 before he was brought to earth. Chippy Maness, the Clemson tailback, raced for 8 yards and, after the Carolina line threw back Timmons, he went over in two more tries. Timmons again kicked the extra point.

The Tigers were wearing the Gamecocks down gradually and seemed headed for another score in the final quarter, but the lightning struck again. After getting

Reiges' Pass To Bowen Wins Game

Battle Proves Dull One; Score Comes Early in Fourth Period at Stadium

The freshman football battle which was expected to give a line on future Georgetown - George Washington scraps for the mythical Washington title developed into a dull push-and-pull affair yesterday at Griffith Stadium, before the little Hoyas eked out a 7-0 victory with a startling pass in the final period.

With only a few seconds of the quarter gone, Ben Reiges, Hoya halfback, brought a meager crowd to its feet when he stepped back of the Colonial 42-yard line and hurled to Substitute Jack Bowen. The latter scrambled over for six points and Reiges completed scoring with a perfect placement.

That was the lone penetration of either team beyond the other's 15-yard line. Throughout the first three sessions the youthful Colonials had all their own way, shoving Georgetown back easily until within sight of scoring territory. Then their attack bogged, however.

Leading the Colonials' offensive were young Paul Weber and Bud MacDougall, a pair of triple-threat backs. Other than Reiges, Georgetown's finest performer, was Fullback Gyorgydeak, whose plunges accounted for most of the winners' gains along the ground.

Chicago U. Paper Sees End Of Football

Chicago, Oct. 24.—The Daily Maroon, student newspaper of the University of Chicago, predicted today in an editorial that "in a very few years many of the Eastern schools will be forced to consider seriously the abolition of football."

The editorial said that Chicago, which abandoned intercollegiate football last December and now sponsors the six-man intramural sport, can again pioneer in the field of education by inaugurating a program of intercollegiate six-man football.

"Such universities as Harvard, Yale and Princeton, although their student newspapers and their administrators as yet lack the courage to admit it, are in the same precarious position that Chicago was in a few years ago," the editorial said.

"Because they cannot turn out good football teams the alumni are becoming hostile. Unless they want the complete sort of flagrant subsidization practiced by some Southern universities, they will continue to turn out at best mediocre teams.

Yanks Sue Powers For $2,500,000 More in Libel Suit

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 24.—Formal papers were filed in Bronx Supreme Court today in a $2,500,000 civil libel suit by 10 New York American League baseball players against Sports Editor Jimmy Powers and the News Syndicate, Inc.

Joined in the action based on an article and cartoon which appeared in the Sunday News on August 18, were Pitchers Lefty Gomez, John Murphy, Monte Pearson, Atley Donald, Oral Hildebrand, Charles Ruffing and Steve Sundra, Second Baseman Joe Gordon, Catcher Bill Dickey and Third Baseman Red Rolfe.

Attorney Samuel L. Sargent, counsel for the ball players, revealed the filing of the suits when he filed a notice of a motion for a preference on the court's trial calendar to be argued November 4.

He said the suits were filed in September, and that a separate $1,000,000 action by Lou Gehrig was based on the same article.

The suit charged that Powers' article contained libelous statements made "in an attempt to explain the reason for a slump in the team's playing."

Several weeks ago, the Daily News published a full page article under a banner headline that read: "The News apologizes to Lou Gehrig and the Yankees."

British War Relief To Net Revenue Of Pimlico Special

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 24.—The entire revenue from pari-mutuel wagering on the Pimlico Special, November 1, will be turned over to British War Relief, Inc., the Maryland Jockey Club announced today.

This use of the money received from wagering on the "horse of the year" race was arranged by Alfred G. Vanderbilt, president of the Jockey Club, and the Baltimore committee on British war relief.

John Kokoski's Return Strengthens Colonials

G. W. IsEven Choice Against West Virginia Tonight; Kokoski Engages in Workout; Mountaineers in Comeback Trail

By Jack Munhall

With "Wandering John" Kokoski having put in a long delayed appearance yesterday, George Washington's Colonials are greatly strengthened for tonight's tussle with West Virginia at Griffith Stadium, the first of a five-game home stand for Bill Reinhart's eleven. Opening kickoff is scheduled at 8:15.

Kokoski, G. W. U.'s outstanding guard, strayed into camp from his Ambridge, Pa., home where he attended the funeral of his father last week and acted as a strong sedative on the nerves of Reinhart. Since the other regular guard, Henry Agusiewicz is a doubtful starter owing to injuries received in last week's Kentucky game, Reinhart was left with only two experienced men for that position, Stan Ziobro and Ellis Hall.

"Koko" Kokoski went through a light workout yesterday and appeared in good physical condition. If the stocky little Pennsylvanian is able to take his place in the lineup, the starting eleven tonight will be the same that started the Kentucky game with the exception of Murphy Booth, crack blocking back, who will replace his understudy, Burnell Martinson, at right half back.

Colonials Are Even Choice

George Washington, having dispelled unpleasant thoughts of the Kentucky shellacking, will rule an even choice to beat the resurgent Mountaineers for its fourth victory in five games.

In preseason appraisals West Virginia has been considered something of a "breather" for George Washington before the Colonials plunged into the most difficult part of their schedule, against Wake Forest, Georgetown, et al. But under the new leadership of Bill Kern West Virginia has made a strong comeback—trouncing Westminster, 17-0, and West Virginia Weslyan, 32-0, and offering spirited opposition to Fordham and Penn State in losing close games—and stacks up as a severe test for the Buff and Blue.

Leading the visitors into action will be John Carliss, a hard plunging fullback, and Charley Seabright, a kicker and passer of quite some repute. A pair of sophomores, Ike Martin and Charley McElwee, rounds out the West Virginia backfield.

The game, in all probability, will

Fordham Holds Light Drill for Gaels' Clash

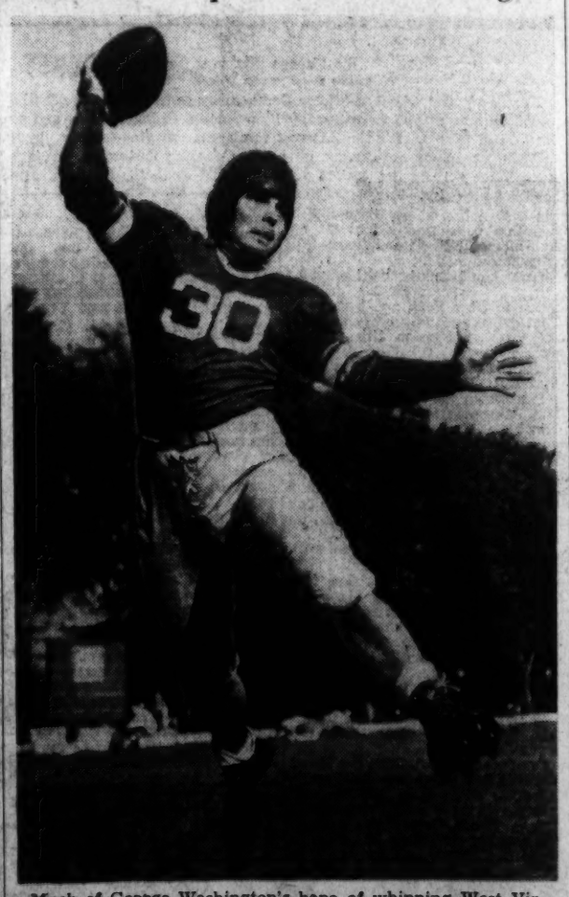
Crowley had his first-stringers watch the second team scrimmage with the freshmen, who were using St. Mary's plays.

Colonials Hope He Comes Through



Much of George Washington's hope of whipping West Virginia tonight at Griffith Stadium hinges on Tom Grady, halfback, who has failed to live up to expectations to date. He's a capable passer and runner, but still undeveloped

Navy Stresses Pass Defense For Yale Game

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 24.—Pass defense was stressed today in Navy's "skeleton" workout for Saturday's tussle with the Yale Bulldogs, a foe the Middies have never conquered.

Bill Busik, Navy's star left halfback, is expected to see action Saturday although he has been out of practice this week with a knee injury, sustained against Drake University.

Wes Gebert has filled in for Busik and may start against the Eli. The other backs will be Johnny Harrell, quarterback; Cliff Lenz, right half, and Alan Cameron, fullback.

With the exception of Capt. Dick Foster and Lars Wanggaard, ends, the Navy line will be the same that played against Drake. Foster is replacing Bob Zoeller, and Wanggaard is substituting for Willis Maxson, who is injured.

The Middie squad of 40 leaves here tonight, arriving at New Haven at 9 a. m. tomorrow. A two-hour workout in the Yale bowl is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon.

Fire Destroys 120 Fox Hounds And 19 Horses

By the Associated Press

Bardstown, Ky., Oct. 24.—One hundred twenty fox hounds and nineteen saddle horses were destroyed early today when fire swept the Nelson County Stockyards, bringing a tragic halt to the Kentucky State Fox Hunters Association's annual meeting.

The losses were not estimated, but association members, most of whom lost from 1 to 16 hounds, said one of the great losses would be in breeding stock.

Add Kentucky Colonels: Manager Bill McKechnie

By the Associated Press

Wilkinsburg, Pa., Oct. 24.—After tonight it will be "Colonel" Bill McKechnie.

A commission signed by Gov. Keen Johnson of Kentucky, conferring the title of Kentucky Colonel, will be among the honors bestowed on the champion Cincinnati Reds' manager at a testimonial dinner in his home town tonight.

Speakers will include National League President Ford Frick, and Coach Hank Gowdy, Outfielder Jimmy Ripple and Pitcher Joe Beggs, all of the Reds.

Passes vs. Power as Redskins-Lions Clash

The air attack as exemplified by Sammy Baugh will be pitted against the power game of the Detroit Lions as spear-headed by Whizzer White when the unbeaten Redskins move against the Detroit club on Sunday.

It will be the clash of the league's No. 1 forward passer and the league's greatest ground-gainer. White, absent from pro football for a year during his studies at Yale, is resuming with the Lions the league's leading ground-gaining rule he held in 1938 with the lowly Pittsburgh club.

The bulk of Coach Ray Flaherty's defensive startegy for the past week has been directed toward checking the wide sweeps and tackle slams of White who has played almost three-quarters of every game of the Detroit club.

Gained More on Ground

The Lions have gained more ground with their running game than any club in the Eastern division except Brooklyn, which has played one more game than Detroit. Detroit Coach Potsy Clark, a disciple of power, has transformed the 1939 razzle-dazzle Lions into a crushing offensive club.

Sunday's game is rated as the perfect setting for the Redskins to annex their sixth straight victory in the league unless Baugh suffers a horrible slump in his passing effectiveness. The Lions have been vulnerable all season to a passing attack.

Figures show that opposing clubs have completed 34 passes against the Lions in 88 attempts in six games. Thus an average of 39 per cent of the opposition's passes have been successful, and with the Redskins now recognized as the No. 1 passing club in the league, the Lions will be peculiarly vulnerable on Sunday.

Lions Better in Some Respects

The Detroit club has a better record than the Redskins in several respects, however. It has a better average in pass interceptions, points yielded, and on ground gained by opponents. In addition to having a better pass percentage, the Redskins shade the Lions in punting, return of kicks, touchdowns and pass defense.

Official league figures comparing the two teams:

Maryland Underdog in Clash With Western Md. Tonight

State Foes Renew Series At Baltimore

Terps Confident In Battle Tonight; Jayvees, Frosh Also Play

Maryland's grid outfit, hoping for its first victory of the season, will travel to Baltimore tonight to play Western Maryland in the stadium there feeling it is better equipped mentally than for any other contest this season.

The Terps, who have drilled almost continuously all week on forward pass defense and on smoothing out their own attack, in which serials have a big part, are confident they are well versed in what should be done to win the game, but hampered in assets from a physical standpoint.

Several members of the squad are nursing minor but retarding injuries and there is not speed in some of the spots to suit the coaches, particularly in pass covering.

The Terps are in an unusual role tonight, being the underdogs for the first time in four years. They won as favorites during the past three seasons but were pressed in each clash to get triumphs by scores of 6 to 0, 14 to 8, and 12 to 0.

The Maryland Jayvees are to play the Penn Jayvees at College Park this afternoon at 4 o'clock and the Terp yearlings are at Lexington, Va., for a tilt with the Washington and Lee frosh. Maryland teams also are underdogs in these two tests.

The varsity will travel to Baltimore tonight by bus, leaving just in time to get dolled up for the contest.

Terrors at Full Strength for Maryland

Westminster, Md., Oct. 24 (AP).—The Western Maryland College football team, gunning for its first victory over the University of Maryland since 1936, will be at full strength for the State championship clash with the Terrapins in Baltimore Stadium tomorrow night.

Ready to "shoot the works" in this game, the Green Terrors believe they hold a slight edge over Maryland. The University has lost four straight games this season, while Western Maryland has defeated Mount St. Mary's and played a scoreless tie with Bucknell.

Capt. Mac McPike, All-Maryland fullback, will lead the Terrors into the wray.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlotte Hall, Md., Oct. 24.—A lethargic Charlotte Hall Military Academy football team was hard-pressed to take a 19-to-0 win from Anacostia High School's "B" squad here this afternoon.

Too prone to view today's clash as a tune-up for its big battle with Augusta Military Academy next week, the Cadets bogged down throughout the game, only brilliant running by Ernie Bowersox and Junie Dyson saving them from utter humiliation.

Bowersox, the Cadets' speedy "scat-back," led the Charlotte Hall attack, scoring two touchdowns, one on a 21-yard pass from Frank Cady, the other on a brilliant 40-yard gallop around end. In addition, he was Charlotte Hall's leading ground-gainer of the afternoon.

Dyson's touchdown, the first Cadet score of the game, came on a 55-yard run-back of a punt late in the second quarter. Dyson broke away from two tacklers and outran the rest of the Indian team to go over the line all by himself.

Ackerman On Fishing

Local anglers have been watching bay waters with more than a little interest for the past ten days in the hope the striped bass will start their usual fall top-feeding. There has been little to repay their efforts, however, for until now the fall season is right in line with the balance of 1940—far below normal.

ACKERMAN

The best chance this weekend seems to be around Point No Point, if the catches of Capt. Taft Tippett and Capt. Raub Drury on Tuesday are a real criterion and not just a flash in the pan. Both were in surfacing schools for fine catches of big fellows best described as weighing around 15 pounds.

Have you some fault in your casting technique that keeps your lure from getting out where it should? Have you a trenchant toward birds nests?

Go down to the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool tomorrow then, between 12:30 and 2, where Capt. Frank Hawks, under the auspices of the National Capital Casting Club, will help everyone who cares to learn more about the game. He'll show you just how simple it can be.

He is here for a few days on his way down to Southport, N. C., for the fall meeting of the Outdoors Writers Association and Bill Keziah's fishing rodeo.

Feminine Ikes have increased until their numbers have reached a new all-time high in the world of sport fishing during the season of 1939-40. The increase over the previous year was nearly 300 per cent.

Acorcding to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, more than 220,000 women anglers obtained licenses this year, and that isn't an adequate figure, for in some States the ladies are grouped with children. In others licenses aren't required. Six States having a special license for women report the sale of 190,688.

"Women" was the first reason advanced by one State in explaining an increase on $44,000 in the total of anglers' fees for the year. Is it any wonder some States are setting aside some waters for the exclusive use of the ladies; others are appointing women fish and game wardens; two women's colleges now offer courses in fly fishing, and 26 high schools have coed classes in angling, as well as colleges and universities in nine States.

It is safe to say more women are salt-water fishing enthusiasts, and in about the same proportion as the men—one to two. Because licenses are not required for this fishing the number can only be approximated.

In the 1940 Greater Miami fishing tournament nearly 60,000 women participated. Out of every four anglers entered, one was a woman. Their outstanding catches, however, placed them on an equal footing with the men.

Georgia Coach Apologizes for Illegal Pass Story

By the Associated Press

Athens, Ga., Oct. 24.—Wallace Butts, Georgia's head football coach, said today he had called Columbia's Lou Little by telephone to say he was "sorry" a story had gotten out to the effect the Lions scored their winning touchdown last Saturday on an illegal forward pass.

"I wanted him (Little) to know," Butts said, "that Georgia did not want to discredit Columbia victory or alibi our defeat."

Buster Birdsong, an Athens photographer who took pictures of the game, was quoted in a story Tuesday as saying the pictures showed the lateral pass on which Columbia scored its winning touchdown was an illegal forward pass.

The Reader Says:

Against Appeasement

Sports Editor of The Post: In his letter which appeared in Wednesday's Post ridiculing Notre Dame's 67-0 romp over Carnegie Tech, Charles E. Planck successfully establishes himself as a critic, but certainly not a good one. The warped theories which he presented were truly surprising, but the fact that he found courage to sign his name to his bleat was astounding.

Our eminent scribe in one breath criticizes the use of 67 players, and in the next, asks why Layden didn't send his third, fourth or fifth team in the fray to make a more even contest. I would suggest that he divide 67 by 11, in order to clear his mind on that subject.

He attempts to exhibit the Irish as a bloodthirsty tribe of headhunters, ravishing a weaker foe without care or conscience. Did Mr. Planck expect Coach Layden to allow his boys to discard their helmets and shoulder pads and execute the latest dance craze while the band played "Cheer, Cheer, For Old Notre Dame?" Did he expect the Irish to "lay down" and allow Tech to chalk up a few markers in order to appease their feelings?

Mr. Planck brands Notre Dame's tactics, "unsportsmanlike." Could anyone, in their right mind, censure those 67 boys for trying to "make good" in the eyes of the coach or for their effort to share in the Nationwide glory that is Notre Dame's?

By the same hypothesis—we would have to elect Cornell as the season's villain for disgracing Army 35-0—we would forever banish the idea of Southern hospitality because of Tennessee's lopsided victory over Alabama.

CHARLES M. MERKLE.

In Defense of Layden

To the Sports Editor: I am writing this in defense of The Post's report of the Notre Dame-Carnegie Tech game which appeared to be inaccurate in the eyes (?) of a Mr. Charles E. Planck. I also object to his reference to the Notre Dame team and coach concerning sportsmanship.

The newspaper should report things as they happened, and anyone who witnessed the game will vouch for the truth of the report as it appeared in your newspaper. The score was 61 to 0 and Notre Dame did not use 67 players.

The friendly relations which Notre Dame has had with major colleges over a period of years should attest to the character of the men who represent her as players and as coaches.

Seldom does Notre Dame use 67 players in one contest, and the use of that number last Saturday should indicate to an intelligent man that they could have beaten Carnegie worse than they did. Elmer Laden used every man who dressed for the game! What more does Mr. Planck want him to do? There is only one other thing he could do and that is to send the boys in with instructions to "lay down."

You can't fire the ambitions of men through the week and ask them to give up on Saturday because the opponent happens to be weak. The best you can do is to use your most capable men the least. This was done.

Why I take this much time to answer a criticism of a newspaper account when the critic still doesn't know that the game was played at Notre Dame and not Pittsburgh, is just one of life's little mysteries.

PHILIP MALONEY.

Best High School Team

To the Sports Editor: I have been reading your sports pages regularly and am peeved at not seeing mention of the best high school team in Pennsylvania. I will even call it the best high school team in the Nation. It is the Mount Carmel High School Tornadoes.

Mount Carmel and Notre Dame have something in common. Both schools always have a good team and seldom lose more than one game a season. I saw Mount Carmel defeat Kulpmont School last Friday night, 39 to 0. Kulpmont is the school that gave Fordham, its big star, Filipowich. But Mount Carmel turned out Lenny Eshmont, who is even a greater star at Fordham than Filipowich. Mount Carmel is 125 miles from Philadelphia, in the coal region which produces so many of the top-notch football players.

Injury-Ridden Raiders Face Wilson Today

Central-Roosevelt Also Featured on Day's Schoolboy Card

By Bill Burnett

If Wilson High, which has a 31-to-6 shellacking by Anacostia to show for its only interhigh football start to date, has any hopes of getting in the victory column this year its clash with Western today on the latter's field appears to be a golden opportunity.

Western, with sound thrashings of Roosevelt and Anacostia to its credit, goes into its half of the day's interhigh twin bill fairly riddled with injuries.

The other portion of the public high program occurs at Roosevelt Stadium, where a Central eleven in almost perfect shape engages another pain-plagued club in the Riders. Both games start at 3:30, as do three other important schoolboy battles in this vicinity and Anacostia's meeting with Charlotte Hall out-of-town. St. John's moves into Eastern Stadium, Gonzaga tangles with Tech at Tech and Landon and Georgetown Prep square off at Garrett Park. The only night game brings together George Washington High and E. C. Glass High, of Lynchburg, in Alexandria at 8 p.m.

Main cog missing in the line-up of Western, defending interhigh champ, will be little Jake Hilleary, its 150-pound passing and running ace. Taken out in the second quarter of the Raiders' game with Anacostia with a sprained ankle, Hilleary is still unable to run.

Hal Mitchell nurses a bruised shoulder and may see only a few minutes of action at end. Another wingman, Gray, was so seriously injured in the first game he has been unable to play since and Grayson Bishop, tackle, has a broken nose. The only cheerful note was sounded yesterday when Buck Herrlein, plunging fullback, ran signals for the first time since the Roosevelt game and was declared ready to go.

Roosevelt prospects for victory over Central dropped considerably when Coach Artie Boyd said he would not let Hymie Perlo, first-line passer and ball-carrier, play because of a bad ankle. Irwin Breier, another back, was only recently released from the hospital with internal injuries and must join Perlo on the sidelines.

Crowd Boos As Zaharias Wins Match

Inasmuch of an offset as the wrestling game affords, Babe Zaharias defeated Warren Bockwinkel last night at Turner's Arena as 1,300 aroused spectators booed lustily.

The end came in exactly 30 minutes as Referee Berger allegedly noted Bockwinkel's shoulders flat on the mat as the later was applying a more or less painful scissors to the person of Zaharias.

In other matches, Handson Paul Boesch took his eighth straight victory, beating Tiger Tasker in 22 minutes; Tommy Rae drew with Chris Zaharias; Pat Rooney pinned Abe Stein in 16 minutes, and Jack Singer defeated Eddie Cook in 17 minutes.

Bears-Giants Renew Bitter Rivalry Sunday in New York

By George Kirksey.

United Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 24.—The "Notre Dame-Army game" of the pro football world will be played here Sunday between the Chicago Bears and the New York Giants. It's the bitterest rivalry in the play-for-pay circuit.

These two clubs always put on a show for the customers, and send them home singing the praises of professional football. Sunday's game should be a daisy. The Bears have not beaten the Giants since 1936, a fact that considerably irks George Halas, owner, coach and foreman of the Chicago outfit.

Last year Halas brought what he thought was one of his greatest teams to New York and lost, 16-13. That defeat probably cost the Bears the western division title. There were many repercussions from the game, the loudest being Halas' bleat that Bill Osmanski went over for a touchdown the officials didn't allow. The pictures later gave some substantiation to Halas' argument.

But as the game was played the Bears should have lost anyway. They let the Giants get 16 points before they scored, and then Bob McLeod had to tear a pass away from a New York defender to set up one of the Bears' touchdown.

Bears Under Wraps?

There's a sneaky suspicion that Halas has been keeping his Bears under wraps since crushing Green Bay, 41-10, in the opening game. The Bears won that one too easy or they've been making the other games look too hard. They had to hustle to beat Cleveland, 21-14; Detroit, 7-0, and Brooklyn 6-7. Then they blew one to the Chicago Cardinals, 21-7, three days after the Green Bay bout.

Every scout who's seen the Bears in action says Halas has the greatest collection of football players ever gathered on a pro club. But for some strange reason they aren't playing like a super club. One of my operatives in Chicago tells me Halas is pointing for a killing, and it may be the Giants Sunday.

The strangest thing about the Bears is that they have one of the greatest passers in football in Sid Luckman and one of the greatest receivers in Ken Kavanaugh, the Louisiana State rookie. They should add up to another Herber-to-Hutson combination, but they haven't yet. Luekman has completed only 16 passes out of 42 attempted for 331 yards. Kavanaugh isn't among the first nine pass catchers.

Giants May Get Answer

George McAfee, the Duke rookie, opened the campaign against Green Bay with one of the greatest exhibitions any youngster has put on in his first pro start. Since then Halas has kept McAfee on the bench most of the time. In five games he's carried the ball only 23 times, an average of less than five times a game. Yet he's gained 152 yards, or 6.6 per crack. If McAfee's that good why doesn't Halas let him play more. Maybe the Giants will get the answer Sunday.

The Bears have so many great ball carriers that they get in each other's way. Besides McAfee, they have Joe Maniaci, Ray Nolting, Gray Famiglietti, Harry Clark, Bill Osmanski and Jack Manders. There is such a thing as too much talent, and maybe that's what's gumming up Hallas' hipper-dipper stuff. The Giants, the League's best defensive team, should settle the riddle of the Bears Sunday. It might be the best football game of the year.

Bug's-Eye View Of Grid Week-end

HARMON COLLEGE MEETS UNIVERSITY OF REAGAN.

If you listened to the political speeches Wednesday night you noticed that Franklin Roosevelt didn't mention Wendell Willkie by name and vice versa.

We aren't going to do that with Reagan of Penn nad Harmon of Michigan because there will be no esteemed contemporary business when those two candidates start down the field like turpentined cats.

There's many a good game this Staurday, but if I was the Dionne Quintuplets, all five of us would be out at Ann Arbor watching Harmon and Reagan.

Harmon is faster than a gambler's shuffle and Reagan can cover more ground than a Chinaman galloping up the Burma road. The only thing I am afraid of is that the Penn line will plow Harmon under like the AAA working on pigs and little potatoes.

That line went to work on Bob Jackson, of Princeton, last Saturday and ran him through the chopper. When it got through with Jackson it had moved Bob's ears down 2 inches and he could not pick up a loving cup if it had two handles. And even at that Princeton scored 28 points and at the bell was stepping out like a city slicker stealing another fellow's girl.

If Penn pulls the rough stuff on Harmon, then Michigan will sure make it mutual. And it wouldn't surprise me none if both of these stars spend the rest of the winter learning how to make a turban out of antiseptic gauze and adhesive tape.

That Penn team is rougher than shark skin. And Michigan can take it and hand it out. So that will be one game where unnecessary roughness will be necessary.

The Penn shellacking of Yale was as brutal as shooting fish in a barrel. Michigan trimmed California almost as bad and pushed Illinois around like an English tea table at tiffin time.

Michigan State gave Michigan a battle, 21-14, which is almost the ratio of the Penn-Princeton game, 46-28, but not quite. But I figure out that Michigan has met the toughest and strongest opposition so far. Anyway, you can take the Bug's word that there is one game that should be played by rounds instead of quarters.

The coach of Yale pulled a crack or two about that Penn line and said that mob would break its grandmother's leg for a wooden nickel just for the fun of throwing the nickel off a bridge and watching it float.

That's what I would call an atrocity in waltz time. But Saturday the Penn lads are meeting a bunch of bulldozers who would lick mustard off a porcupine. Which all makes for an agitated afternoon when you realize those 11 Quakers from Philadelphia wouldn't even turn the other cheek for a barber.

Yessir, that game should win the Academy award for times out, substitutes and class reunions in oxygen tents.

There will be no huddles between plays. It's dangerous to turn your back for a minute in that contest.

Giants Pick Miami For Training Site

Miami, Fla., Oct. 24 (AP).—The city commission approved informally today a plan to arrange suitable facilities for the New York Giants baseball club to train here next spring.

Manager Bill Terry of the Giants, who has been here several days, said the team would train in Miami from February 15 to March 21 if proper facilities were offered. Eleven exhibition games would be played here.

Four A.U. Gridders Hurt in Tough Scrimmage Game

Four American University gridders were injured in a stiff scrimmage held by the Eagles yesterday at Wesley Heights Field. Halfback Bill Garland reinjured his knee, but is expected to be ready for the Randolph-Macon game at Ashland a week from Saturday. Jack Payne, freshman center, left the scrimmage with a bad foot which has to be X-rayed before the extent of his injury is known.

Bob Lanzilotti, former Central High star, received a broken nose, and Bob Whalen, substitute guard, sustained a back injury. Homer Sprinkle, who shone in last Saturday's tie with Johns Hopkins, is nursing a cold in his shoulder, but he will be ready for the clash with the Jackets.

Coach Staff Cassell, outside of the injuries, was satisfied with yesterday's drill. Ernest McCarthy, a newcomer who Cassell hopes to convert into a plunging back, made several good charges and his 172 pounds will be a happy addition to the Eagles' backfield.

Governor's Golf Play Postponed at Manor

Play in the annual Governor's Trophy Golf Tournament at Manor Country Club, it was announced yesterday, has been postponed from October 29-30 to November 1-2.

Reason for the shift was the clash with the Ladies' Field Day at Kenwood Country Club.

Dick O'Brien Named Fight Body Secretary

Sportswriter to Replace Harvey Miller as Temporary Secretary

The District of Columbia Boxing Commission yesterday appointed Dick O'Brien, local sportswriter, as temporary secretary of the commission during the absence of Harvey L. Miller.

Miller, a lieutenant colonel in the Fifth Marine Reserves, has been called to active duty on November 7. O'Brien will assume his duties November 8, it was announced by Chairman Claude W. Owen at the same time the appointment was revealed.

Though coming as no surprise to boxing men of Washington, O'Brien's installation as secretary was nevertheless considered as putting the commission on a spot. At a meeting called by the body last Saturday, newspapermen and others interested in Miller's successor were asked their opinion of an O'Brien-for-secretary move and it was the consensus that the latter's sports-writing job would interfere with secretarial duties. Representatives of two local papers were openly hostile to the proposal.

O'Brien's appointment came, in the words of the Boxing Commission, "after mature deliberation . . . of all available applicants." Among these were Howard W. Livingston, former boxing instructor, who boasted White House backing; Bill McCormick, former Washington Post boxing writer, now in the National Wildlife Institute; Eddie LaFond, boxing coach at Catholic University, and Charles Reynolds, referee and boys' club director.

Fifteen years of observing local fisticuffs in his capacity as sports reporter are behind O'Brien's selection for the post.

Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Golf Tourney Taken by Rut Coffey

Winchester Pro Defeats Al Houghton

Wiffy Cox Is Third At Terra Mariae Club; Winner Posts 139

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
A Staff Correspondent

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 24.—Rut Coffey, 34-year-old Winchester, Va., professional who has been knocking at the door of pro tournaments in this section for a number of years, put together a pair of remarkably consistent rounds here today over the Terra Mariae course to win the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. championship with a sub-par 139 total.

Coffey was the morning round leader with a 69. He held his advantage through the twenty-seventh hole with a par out nine of 35 and he breezed home with nine consecutive pars for a 70 and a one stroke margin over Al Houghton, of the Beaver Dam Club. His victory was worth $125 and a gold medal.

The stretch race between Houghton and Coffey, who tied with Cliff Spencer for the Maryland Open Championship in July, was to see who could break their own pet jinx. In his many years of local competition, Houghton has never been able to win the sectional P. G. A. title although he was second twice and promoted the tourney for the last three years. Coffey has been a consistent runner-up but this is his debut in the winner's circle.

Wiffy Cox Is Third

Despite some crazy optics from a misbehaving putter, Wiffy Cox was only two over par for the day as he finished third with a pair of 71's for a 142 total, worth $50. Houghton's pair of par 70's netted him $75. Johnny O'Donnell, of the Country Club of Virginia, in Richmond, took down fourth prize of $35 with a 146 score, taking 76 in the afternoon after he was one of the four men in a position to win the title at the end of the morning round. The afternoon battle was strictly between Coffey, 69; Houghton and O'Donnell, 70, and Cox, 71.

Alex Taylor, veteran Rolling Road professional who will make his debut in the P. G. A. senior's championship this year, was fifth with 77-70, 147, his afternoon round including 5 birdies.

The $400 prize money, the sum the pros finally played for after kicking around the $1,000 offer from Old Point Comfort in the spring, was split a dozen different ways. Winners of $15 prizes included defending champion, Cliff Spencer, of East Potomac, and Leo Fraser, Rolling Road manager and former New Jersey pro, with 149s. Outgoing President Ralph Beach and Gene Larkin scored 150, the latter with a pair of 75s, while three $10 prizes went to Leo Walper, a two-time former champion; Jimmy Flattery, Baltimore C. C., and Andy Gibson, Bonnie View, all with 151 totals. Gibson took 9 on the par 4 sixteenth in the morning and then came back in 70. Walper was 76 in the afternoon, and missed only 2 greens in regulation figures.

Houghton came through with what he termed "one of the greatest finishes of my career" to post the 140, a score that looked like a winner at the time. The four-time Maryland Open champion had trouble with the seventh and eighth holes, going a total of five over par in the two rounds, but he made up for his miscues with eight birdies, including 100 per cent on the par-five holes each time he played them.

Biggest disappointment was Lewis Worsham, who finished out of the money with 152 but the young pro was playing with a heavy cold and barely made the last green.

Rut Coffey, Winchester, Va., 34 35—69; 35 35—70—139.

Mid-Atlantic P. G. A. Elects Cox President

Wiffy Cox, the logical choice according to most observers, was elected president of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. last night at a meeting of the body following the annual tourney yesterday at Terra Mariae Club. He will succeed Ralph Beach, two-time president of Suburban.

Other officers for the coming year will be Robert Barnett, Chevy Chase, vice president for the D. C. area; Rut Coffey, Winchester, vice president for the Virginia area; John Flattery, Terra Mariae, vice president for the Baltimore area, and Gene Larkin, Woodmont, secretary-treasurer.

Cox and Larkin were also selected as the Middle Atlantic delegation to the National P. G. A. meeting in Chicago next month. Immediately after his election, Cox announced he would stage three major golf tournaments next year, in addition to the regular schedule. They will be the Washington Open, the Richmond Open and the Baltimore Open.

All-Time Pin Record Set By Miss Pettit

Olive Pettit, Shepherd Park team, again shone at Silver Spring in the Silver Springs ladies bowling. Miss Pettit crashed the pins for a record high game of 151 and then came right back to set an all-time high record for set with 391. Miss Pettit's clever work helped her team do some fine pin crashing on its own account that earned high counts of 527, 1,473 and three straight over Brookville Quarry.

POLICE NO. 1 SCORES

Police Dept. No. 1 was the standout quintet on the Brookland Recreation in the District of Columbia Government League. The team set season records with high counts for game and set of 671 and 1,783, respectively. Young and Compton, both Police Dept. No. 1 members, took individual highest for game and set with 166 and 391, both marks being within a few pins of equaling existing records.

INFORMATION VICTOR

The Division of Information quintet of the Civil Service loop knew too much for the other teams at New Recreation and took game and set highs with 547, 1,596. Carl Gebuhr led the way for his Information boys with individual highs of 134, 352. Bar won all three games and Accounts and Maintenance leads the league with 10 and 2.

MISS MADDOX HIGH

Myrtle Maddox, Vital Statistics, and Frances Hopkins, Gen. Inf. & Rec., took individual highs for game and set of 111, 301, respectively, in the Census Ladies, rolling at Columbia. The Population five captured team honors with 468, 1,355, sweeping Geography aside in all three games, as did Field with Territorial-Insular.

KOVAL'S 125 BEST

J. Koval, Hydraulic Pressed Brick, rolled highs at the Ice Palace in the Brick Manufacturers loop. Koval took a 125 count for game and came back with 365 for high individual set and helped his quintet count 557 and 1,507 for team highs and three straight from their opponents. Thompson & Slocombe took the odd game from R. Robinson to go into a first-place tie with Washington Brick.

CRUZ SWEEPS HONORS

Benny Cruz, Leet Bros., was too good for the others at the Ice Palace in the Reproduction Trades meet and rolled highs for game and set of 149 and 376, respectively. The Buckingham Studios quintet took all team highs with 614 and 1,682.

be decided in the line where the Mountaineers will enjoy a reported 6 pounds per man edge. Neither team, judging from their previous starts, boasts more than a fair passing attack, and both apparently have strong ground attacks.

Against West Virginia's powerful running Carliss and Martin, George Washington will pit its touchdown twins, Ken Batson and Walter Fedora, with the possibility that either or both Tom Grady and Ed Wiliamoski will at last swing into stride. Neither Grady nod Wiliamoski, who are the will-of-the-wisp type of ball carriers, has played up to form and both are long overdue.

Tonight's game will be the eighth of a hard-fought series between Colonials and Mountaineers, with George Washington holding a 4-3 edge.

Meighan and Glod, Last Year's Stars, Play Against Cardinals

Brookland Stadium Scene of Game Tomorrow; C. U. Holds Stiff Scrimmage

At least two of the West Virginia Wesleyan gridders who face Catholic University eleven tomorrow at Brookland stadium in the Cardinals first home appearance of the season are old acquaintances of the Flying Redbirds.

They are Eddie Meighan and Paul Glod, stars of last year's meeting of the teams.

Meighan, in particular, is expected to get a lion's share of Catholic U.'s attention, for its was his passing which kept C. U. braced constantly last year. Meighan, a fullback, completed 13 passes throughout the 1939 clash and was responsible for an aerial yardage gain of 137 yards.

In the next-to-last workout yesterday Coach Dutch Bergman gave much of his time during a stiff scrimmage to his line. Meanwhile he indicated that the Cards would be well fortified in whatever aerial game develops with Pete Sachon, All-America candidate, doing the throwing.

Mrs. Thornburg Leads Teal Golf

Mrs. Richard Thornburg took honors in the first 18 holes of the Teal Trophy 36-hole match against par yesterday at Kenwood with a 96 plus 20 handicap, for a 1 down to par.

Mrs. J. A. Thurston was second with 96-19, 2 down to par. Mrs. A. A. McEntee posted a 90-11, 4 down to par and Mrs. Jack Jago also was 4 down with a 100-20.

Low gross went to Mrs. Richard Kreuzburg with an 89.

Final Cycle Races Listed This Sunday

Due to the early snowfall last week, the final race meet of the season will be sponsored by the National Capital Motorcycle Club this Sunday at Glenmont Heights, Md. The first event will get under way at 2:30 with nine events on the day's program.

John Hostetter, Pennsylvania State champion for 1939; Ted Boyd Randalstown, Md., and George Schantzenbach, of Bethlehem, Pa., are some of the out-of-town riders expected to show up as no event is scheduled in the nearby area. Local riders hoping to keep the American Motorcycle Association trophy here in town will be led by Bob McKeever. Don Smith, Charles Smith, Bob Wells, Jack Wimsatt, Ross Beach, George Beacraft, and members of that famous Harley racing team.

The course is designed with both right and left hand turns to give the riders a chance to show their skill in handling their powerful racing mounts, and the size of the course is such that all of the action can be seen from any one point

Hoyas Given Big Send-Off For N.Y. Battle

36 Players Making Trip to Gotham; Band To Accompany Club

Thirty-six Georgetown University football players, with the cheers of an enthusiastic student body and hundreds of old graduates still ringing in their ears, will depart for New York via the Pennsylvania Railroad this morning at 9 o'clock.

A mammoth pep demonstration at the Hilltop climaxed by a torchlight parade through the streets of Georgetown last night were offered in tribute to these 3-year undefeated warriors who tomorrow afternoon are to oppose New York University's Violets at the Yankee Stadium.

Virtually the entire student body and several thousand alumni members are expected to accompany the Hoyas to New York, alumni of Boston and Philadelphia and the District being scheduled to run football specials to the game.

Band to Accompany Team

This afternoon at 1:15 o'clock the District Alumni football special is to depart on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. The crack, 60-piece Georgetown University Band also is to make the trip and indications are that the largest representation in the school's history will be present for this eleventh game of a traditional series dating back to 1928.

Enthusiastic students and alumni gathered at the Hilltop last night and joined in the songs and cheers that resounded over the campus. A huge bon-fire illuminated the campus and the school's band joined in the festivities with appropriate melodies.

Lou Ghecas and Joe McFadden, key men of the great Georgetown backfield, addressed the gathering briefly, while Coach Jack Hagerty also spoke briefly in tribute to the boys who have made the 3-year undefeated reign at Georgetown possible.

Hagerty yesterday afternoon disclosed that Jim (Bull) Castiglia, terrific plunging senior fullback, will captain the Hoyas into action against New York U. tomorrow. Castiglia played the game of his life against Temple in early season, only to be injured in the Waynesburg game.

Jack Hagerty, currently basking in the spotlight in New York, tonight will be guest of honor at a huge rally and smoker to be sponsored by the New York University Alumni at the Concourse Plaza Hotel. Mal Stevens, New York University coach, will share the spotlight with Hagerty.

Mrs. Davy Takes Lead In Payne Golf Play

Congressional Player Posts 85 for 173 Total to Oust Mrs. Meckley From Top Position; Mrs. Schluderberg Is Third

Taking advantage of a poor 89 turned in by the first day leader, Mrs. Myron Davy, Congressional Country Club linkslady, romped into the top spot in the 54-hole Payne Trophy golf tourney over her home course yesterday with an 85 for a total of 173.

One stroke back as the first three-day medal event in D. C. history passed the two-thirds mark was Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Kenwood, whose 85 captured the opening day lead by three strokes. The wind and elongated Congressional layout apparently were too much for Mrs. Meckley as she stepped down to the steady firing of Mrs. Davy.

Though she went two over par on the sixth and ninth holes, Mrs. Davy boasted 12 pars on her card. By way of winding up with a flourish, she turned the last four holes of yesterday's round in exact regulation figures.

Two strokes off the lead was Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg, pace setter for the Baltimore contingent, who toured the hilly course in 86 strokes for a total of 175. The Baltimore Country Club star shared runner-up honors for low nine with Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, each with 41.

Mrs. Schluderberg, in taking third place, improved her position one notch as Mrs. Leo Walper, of Indian Spring, fell from third to a tie for fourth with an erratic 89-177. Her partner in fourth place was Mrs. W. R. Stokes, Manor, who knocked one stroke off her first day total of 89.

Second best of the Baltimore contenders was Mrs. Jerome Sloman, of Suburban Country Club, whose 89 was a four stroke improvement on her opening effort and gave her sixth place with 182.

Judge Reserves Decision on Congressional

'Trustees Plan' to Be Submitted to All Parties Before Final Action

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 24.—Federal Judge W. Calvin Chestnut today ordered the "trustees' plan" for reorganizing the Congressional Country Club be submitted to all parties "at interest" in the matter before final action is taken by the court.

The club, in Montgomery County near Washington, sought permission to reorganize under provision of the Federal Bankruptcy Act last August.

Lanier P. McLachlin, Washington banker and a trustee of the club, suggested at today's hearing that an assessment of the membership amounting to 8 per cent of the dues would provide capital needed immediately for repairs and taxes.

He also expressed belief that with good management the club's membership could be increased so that it could function adequately. The club has facilities for about 3,000 members. Judge Chestnut was told that 109 members recently resigned.

Col. Julius I. Peyser, representing the second bondholders, life members and certificate holders, said the club's active membership now is about 270. Peyser and Roger J. Whiteford, counsel for the Acacia Insurance Co., which holds a first mortgage on the club, said the property was too elaborate, was badly built and was too expensive to maintain. They said about $2,000,000 had been invested in it.

Liberty Flight Captures Delmar Purse in Driving Finish

Denemark's Charge Beats Equistar

Woodchopper Runs 3d; Victor Piloted By Carroll Bierman, Pays $6.40 Mutuel

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Laurel, Md., Oct. 24.—W. F. Mannagh's Liberty Flight, a 5-year-old by Liberty Limited and High Flight, showed a game burst of stretch speed today to win the Delmar Handicap, a $1,500 race serving feature purposes on the Thursday card. With Jockey Carroll Bierman, No. 1 rider in these parts, in charge of the saddle work, Liberty Flight came on with a stretch drive that forced Mrs. Emil Denemark's Equistar into second money by the margin of a neck. Five lengths farther back came H. G. Bedwell's Woodchopper to be third in the field of six, going 6 furlongs.

One of the best week day crowds of the meeting, estimated at 9,000, reported in the best weather afforded at this track this fall. The customers made Liberty Flight a light favorite and he paid $6.40. The track was in excellent shape after being off all week and the winner was clocked in a creditable 1:12 3-5.

Pair Wage Battle

Equistar and Woodchopper hopped to the front when Starter Jim Milton pressed the button and the pair fought a head-and-head battle for the lead going to the turn. Woodchopper was first to say "uncle" and Equistar drew out. In the meanwhile, Bierman, aboard Liberty Flight, was biding his time.

Approaching the stretch, Bierman swung Liberty Flight to the outside and he began whittling down Equistar's lead. It was not until inside the eighth pole that Liberty Flight drew up on even terms with the pacemaker. From that point to the wire the gelding gradually gained a lead.

The steeplechase race, which has been bringing an injury a day, resulted in a dislocated collar bone for Jockey Ottie Helicus. The boy was thrown heavily when Red Robin fell at the fourth jump. The favorite, Forest Charm; was among others to lose riders but the jockey escaped injury.

Judges Bid Pays $9.50

M. B. Goss, of Winchester, Va., saddled his Judges Bid to send the 6-year-old out to win. Jockey H. W. Clements did the riding and brought the $9.50 shot home two lengths ahead of Playdema in a driving finish that saw Sir Romeo third in a starting field of nine.

The daily double paid $177 and was the "4 and 3" combination of Fit Miss in the first race and Cansting in the third event. Fit Miss was ridden by Bierman and defeated, among others, Sweet Shop and Parfait Amour in a driving finish.

Cansting won the third and paid an individual mutuel of $28.20, leading Satiation and Pompier to the wire under a good ride by Jockey E. Mower.

Selections at Laurel

Dear Al:

I wonder if there is any truth in the rumor that Pimlico will have a man at the finish line tomorrow with a Pimlico Special invitations to give to the horses that finish one, two and three in the Washington Handicap? How come my horse, Clymene, wasn't asked. But all kidding aside, the Special is going to be a real horse race. When Owner Riddle started to get weight conscious about War Admiral, the son of Man o' War got knocked off. Now Owner Brann seems to be weight conscious about Challedon. At least the 132 pounds seems to have kept the Challenger II, colt out of the Washington Handicap. Speaking of tomorrow's two-way show, the line-ups may be: Selima: John A. Bell's Dark Discovery, E. R. Bradley's Big Event, Blinking Owl, T. Watson Hayward's Swynstan, Mrs. E. Graham Lewis' Sister Union, Breckenridge Long's Nasca, King Ranch's Frontier Model, J. H. Louchheim's Hanid, Millsdale Stable's Happy Home, Cleveland Putnam's Moja, Samuel D. Riddle's Yankee Flirt, Valdina Farm's Valdina Myth, Woolford Farm's Silvestra. Washington: A. J. Abel's Honey Cloud, James Cox Brady's War Plumage, Brandywine Stable's Masked General, French Lick Springs Stable's Yale o' Nine, Mrs. Dion K. Kerr's True Call, Myron Selznick's Can't Wait, Shandon Stable's Burning Star, Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight, Joseph E. Widener's Mocow II, Townsend B. Martin's Bolingbroke. A number of horsemen met in the Laurel clubhouse to discuss two types of "preferred list" which have been in use at the Maryland tracks. Several trainers favor a preferred list based on sprint and distance events only while others like the one in use here, in which horses get preference for the exact kind of races from which they were first eliminated. Edward J. Brennan, racing secretary in charge of the steeplechasing, both here and at Pimlico, was absent this morning, having been called to testify in a hearing over the location of one of Pimlico's barns. Agent Tom Kelly has taken over the book of Jockey John Harrell. Carroll Bierman has been engaged to ride Woodvale Farm's Our Boots in the Pimlico Futurity. Milky Way Farm's After Dawn $8,000 yearling purchase will be pointed for the Waldon Stakes at Pimlico. Following that race, Trainer Roy Waldron will ship the Milky Way horses to California. Carroll Bierman tops the jockey list again with 16 winners while F. A. Smith is second with 15. Four boys are tied for third place with eight victories apiece. They are Henri Mora, Wayne Wright, Darrell Madden and Mannie Berg. See you on the rail.

First race—Miss Fixit was placed over her head racing against Pont Neuf and Tiny Trick at Havre. She meets a cheap field of Maryland bred platers and receives the call off her form on the half milers. Joe Smokey has speed at time and could threaten if fit. Chatabit might better his last race.

Second race—The Montpelier-Jones entry of Santi Quaranti and Pine Tag hold the edge in this number as both have won recently over jumpers of this caliber. Rockden displayed speed in New York races and may be the one to upset the dope. Quaker Street appears capable of handling the others.

Third race—Night Glow, competing in a field of better grade juveniles, appeared to be the winner when she bore out on the stretch turn. Unknown Land finished back of the top horse in that race but has won since. Southern Jane was a good second in her last and should be close.

Fourth race—Bryan Station and Bird Woman, comprising the Bradley entry stand out in this heat on the merits of the former's winning effort in Spalding Lowe Jenkins. The latter has speed but doesn't match her stable mate. Cis Marion is a classy filly and figures slightly better than Abbots Maid for the show award.

Fifth race—Sweet Willow surprised the form players by registering over Thorn Apple last start running six furlongs in 1:11 3-5. The filly is in the peak of form and is expected to repeat. Thorn Apple is a consistent sprinter and should give Sweet Willow stout opposition. Paronascope may get up for show.

Sixth race—Wayriel was overmatched last start but in a previous effort whipped platers of this quality in creditable time. Showing improvement with racing, she should score here. Barograph won his last in New England and appears the one to beat. Cheerme is the class here but has gone back.

Seventh race—Charlene took much the worst of the breaks when fourth to Wayriel recently. With an equal share of luck, she should whip the cheap field that opposes her. Frances Keene has shown little lately but works indicate that she is on edge for her best. Pirate Ship for show.

Eighth race—Dark May was not persevered with when she tired running behind Dark Watch last week. She drops down for today's engagement and has displayed sufficient speed to win in this company. Brown Knight had no excuse in his last but might get up to take second honors. Bull Terrier has speed but is not expected to last.

Best bet—Bryan Station

'Outside' Trade Ban Harmful, Big Board Told

SEC Asks Exchange To Rescind Rule on 'Multiple' Deals

By the Associated Press

The Securities Commission asked the New York Stock Exchange yesterday to rescind a rule barring members from so-called "multiple" trading on the ground that it would "endanger the future" of regional exchanges "with consequent injury to the investing public."

The rule, adopted July 12, would prohibit members of the exchange from trading on other exchanges in stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Sumner T. Pike, SEC commissioner, made public a letter to William McC. Martin, jr., president of the New York Exchange, requesting withdrawal of the regulation, which was to have gone into full effect November 1, after some delays in response to previous request of the commission.

Pike made public also a summary of a study of the whole problem of "multiple" trading, prepared by the commission staff.

"The consequences of the New York Stock Exchange's action," this summary said, "will be undesirable at best and at its worst may prove to be extremely serious for individual investors in some localities and for the public at large.

"This action by the New York Stock Exchange, even though ostensibly directed solely to its own members, materially affects inter-exchange competition in a manner harmful to the general public interest and to individual investors."

The SEC said that there was a "definite advantage from the individual's point of view in the development of facilities for multiple trading on local exchanges, and that the smaller exchanges also served as "feeders" for the New York mart.

Two of the six affected exchanges were said to be "so reliant upon their multiple trading systems" and upon continued membership on the New York Stock Exchange "as to raise the possibility of the dissolution of these exchanges as an ultimate consequence of the New York Stock Exchange's action."

Week's Output Of Autos to Hit 117,350 Units

Detroit, Oct. 24 (AP).—Automotive News, in a survey of automobile plant activity, estimated today that this week's output would total 117,350 cars and trucks. Last week it placed production at 112,773 units. A year ago this week 78,834 vehicles were assembled.

October production to date, says the trade paper, totals 425,922 units, and original schedules having been revised upward, aggregate output for the month may reach close to 500,000 cars and trucks.

The survey places production of General Motors divisions at 50,450 this week, compared with 48,102 last week. The several units of Chrysler Corporation assembled 27,050 vehicles, compared with 26,150 last week. Ford assemblies in all plants numbered 22,275 cars and trucks, compared with 21,120 last week.

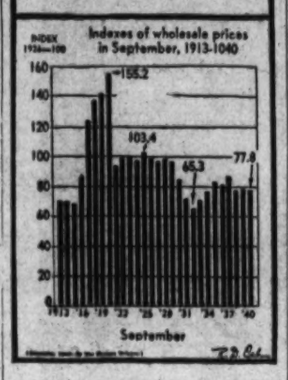
Wholesale Prices in September of Each Year



U. S. Exports Decrease 16% In September

Aircraft Shipments Lead Drop; Imports Also Fall Off

By the Associated Press

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that exports dropped 16 per cent in September to $295,000,000, the lowest monthly total since November, 1939.

Imports declined for the second consecutive month, decreasing $26,000,000 from the August level to $195,000,000 in September.

Noting a "general falling off" in exports, the department said that under existing world conditions it was difficult to determine whether it "represents more than a temporary recession."

A drop of $14,000,000 in shipments of aircraft and parts to $23,000,000 was the largest single factor in the export decline, although the trend was reflected in many commodities. The department noted that "even exports of iron and steel manufacturers, which have shown an almost unbroken rise, since the beginning of the European war, also fell off."

Shipments of some agricultural products were reported as "considerably smaller."

The September export total compared with $289,000,000 in the same month last year. The excess of exports for September was $100,000,000 over imports, a drop of $30,000,000 from the August favorable balance.

The department said that as a result of Government and private purchases, rubber imports reached the highest figure on record—a total of 176,339,000 pounds valued at $30,655,000.

Chrysler Lifts Dividend to $1.75 a Share

Nine-Month Earnings Reported Equal to $7.06 a Share

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 24.—Chrysler Corporation directors voted a dividend of $1.75 a share on the capital stock, a boost of 50 cents a share over the payments made in March, June and September of this year. The dividend is payable December 12 to holders of record November 12. The company has approximately 4,350,000 shares outstanding.

The automobile company reported a net profit of $30,706,094, or $7.06 a share, for the nine months ended September 30 after charges and Federal income and excess profits taxes. This compared with $31,403,118, or $7.22 a share, in the first nine months of 1939.

For the year to date, Chrysler has dispersed $5.50 a share in dividends, this including the payment authorized today. In 1939, stockholders received a total of $5 a share.

Chrysler sales in the nine months totaled 731,773 automobiles and trucks with gross value of $514,698,390 compared with 631,355 cars and trucks valued at $441,895, 380 in the like 1939 period.

The provision for taxes in the 1940 period was $14,400,000, double the provision made in the first nine months of 1939.

Rail Loadings Show Slight Gain Against Trend

By the Associated Press

The Association of Railroads reported yesterday 813,909 cars of revenue freight were loaded during the week ended last Saturday.

This was an increase of 2,003 cars, or .2 of 1 per cent, compared with the preceding week; a decrease of 42,380, or 4.9 per cent, compared with a year ago, and an increase of 108,625, or 15.4 per cent, compared with 1938.

Another rise in miscellaneous freight was responsible for the small contra-seasonal advance in total loadings. Coal shipments continued to lag, holding total shipments substantially below the level of a year ago.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index of loadings, based on 1929-30 as 100, advanced to 73.0 compared with 72.8 the previous week, and 77.2 a year ago.

Cotton Futures

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—A flurry of hedge selling put a silent dent in the cotton futures market in late trading today. Final prices were unchanged to 3 points lower.

Early steadiness reflected mill price-fixing and optimism in trade quarters on prospects for increasing distribution of cotton textiles in defense and civilian channels.

Worth Street reports were featureless as to the day's business in basic cotton cloth, but mill agents said the price structure was decidedly firm.

Chinese issues gained up to a point and supplied the interest in the bond section.

Volume Dwindles as Stocks Edge Lower; Traders Cash Profits on Two-Day Climb

New York, Oct. 24.—Prices softened and volume dwindled in today's market as profits were cashed on the two preceding rising sessions. The list got off to an irregular start, with steels and other recent industrial favorites tending to give ground. Dealings, fast for a while, soon slackened but efforts at rallies met with scant response. Quotations hit bottom in the final hour, losses ranging from fractions to a point or so. Declines were shaded in many instances at the close.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .2 of a point at 44.6 compared with an upturn yesterday of .3 and a gain Tuesday of .1. The composite stood at 44.7 a month ago. Transfers amounted to 538,770 shares against 807,040 the day before.

Notwithstanding the persistence of favorable business indicators, brokers said, confusing elements in the foreign scene tended to accentuate the timidity of potential buyers. Wall Street seemed more hopeful than otherwise regarding election trends but even here skeptics were plentiful.

Among stocks in arrears at the finish were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet, Chrysler, General Motors, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, Glenn Martin, Consolidated Edison, Public Service of New Jersey, American Smelting, Anaconda, Westinghouse, duPont, Eastman Kodak, U. S. Gypsum, Santa Fe, New York Central and Dow Chemical.

Rails generally kept their recessions to negligible fractions as today's official summary of last week's freight loadings disclosed a contra-seasonal increase. Transportation observers expressed considerable optimism over the outlook for mounting traffic as the defense program moved forward.

Among curb losers were American Gas, Electric Bond & Share, Jones & Laughlin, Bell Aircraft, New Jersey Zinc and Creole Petroleum. The turnover here was around 91,000 shares versus 115,000 Wednesday.

Despite a reaction in most speculative commodities from the advance of the last week or so the Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot commodities yesterday continued its rise to a new high since December, 1937.

The measure, based on 1926 as 100 climbed to 75.54 from 75.52 Wednesday.

Dealings in futures embraced considerable speculative profit selling based on the recent upturn. Declines in hides and copper were sharp, averaging more than ¾ cent a pound.

Chicago wheat dropped back ⅝ to 1⅛ cent a bushel and corn closed ⅛ cent lower to ⅛ cent up.

A few markets held about even with yesterday's final levels but declines predominated, affecting cotton, cottonseed oil, wool tops, cocoa and silk. Santos coffee contracts made small gains and rubber was irregular.

Miss Julia Vass Dies; Suicide Verdict Returned

A certificate of suicide was issued last night by Deputy Coroner Christopher J. Murphy in the death of Miss Julia L. Vass, 41, cashier of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic under suspension pending an investigation of a $2,000 shortage.

Miss Vass succumbed to the effects of poison "complicated by pneumonia" at Gallinger Hospital at 10:07 a. m. She was admitted to the hospital October 14, a short time after she was notified of her suspension.

Police said she was found unconscious in her apartment, 18 Ninth Street Northeast, by Spruce A. Baird, of 2125 G Street Northwest, a friend, who was informed by Miss Vass over the telephone that she had swallowed a disinfectant.

Miss Vass and Merk Dunn, an assistant cashier, were both suspended by the Commissioners October 13, after the shortage became known. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen disclosed that Miss Vass had known of the shortage since April 11, but was unable to give "a satisfactory explanation."

It was said at the District Building yesterday that Miss Vass' death will have no effect on an investigation now under way.

A Statement About The Gallup Poll

Five years ago when the Gallup Poll was first introduced to its readers by The Washington Post many newspaper men and politicians laughed at the idea that public opinion could be accurately measured by any method.

Today the Gallup Poll is flattered by a host of imitators.

But there is only one Gallup Poll, and that appears EXCLUSIVELY in Washington in the daily and Sunday editions of

The Washington Post

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Grin and Bear It

Listen! with Glynn

Here you people have been going along quite calmly, no doubt, thinking this was just another week, pretty much like the previous and the next, all unconscious of the fact that it's nothing of the sort at all.

No indeed, ladies and gentlemen! With our usual solemn, missionary zeal we hasten to inform you that it's nothing less than National Doughnut Week. We're always doing something profoundly important like that, catering to hungry souls with bits of spiritual enlightenment.

Such a solemn occasion calls for ceremonies, of course, and tonight there's to be what amounts to a Nation-wide celebration. Five special guests, all of them specially interested in the finer things that the doughnut stands for, are to appear on Bob Ripley's "Believe It or Not" program, heard over WJSV at 10 p. m.

First, there'll be A. L. Plant, of New York, who makes a specialty of selling the holes in doughnuts—a whimsical fellow, this Mr. Plant—then there'll be Albert Andre McVittie, of Denver, who's never let a day go by within the pass 33 years without eating a doughnut, and then—this was inevitable, of course—there'll be the world's champion dunkers. They are Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard C. Stites, of Nutley, N. J., and their son, Joseph, who won the title against all comers in a no-holds-barred competition at the New York World's Fair last month.

Ah, yes, my friends, National Doughnut Week is in the air!

World's Fair Ends Two-Year Show Sunday

Wreckers Will Begin Converting Site Into City Park Monday

By Inez Robb
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 24.—Sic semper gloria—

Without benefit of Halley's comet or other supernatural omens, the World of Tomorrow will come to a loud and explosive end sometime Sunday night when the New York World's Fair folds finally and irrevocably.

Already the fan dancers are packing away their feathers; the living magazine covers are beginning to put on their clothes; Grover Whalen, the glamor greeter, and Elsie, the glamor cow, plan long vacations to get away from it all; bargain hunters haunt the pavilions and engineers are still stumped by the problem of tearing down anything as big and cumbersome as the Perisphere and Trylon.

The World of Tomorrow still offers 1,216½ acres of wonders to challenge the mind, surfeit the imagination and destroy the pedal extremities, but its trees are threadbare, its flowers frost-bitten and its buildings thumb-marked.

This time there is no question of repair, for early Monday morning professional wreckers by the hundreds will move into Flushing Meadows to complete the work begun the night before by farewell crowds which are expected to carry off as souvenirs anything left lying around loose.

By the time another spring rolls round, a new municipal park will burgeon where the World's Fair held sway for two long seasons. Only seven of the present buildings will be preserved, the New York City Building, the New York State Marine Ampitheater, the B. F. Goodrich Building, the House of Jewels, the Masterpieces of Art Building, the tower of the Polish Building and the Japanese Pavilion.

Otherwise, this panoramic glimpse into the future, this prospectus of the world to come, built at a cost of some $173,000,000, on what was once a garbage dump, will have receded forever into the past.

Roosevelt's Acts, Willkie's Promises Called Identical

Emporia, Kans., Oct. 24 (AP).—William Allen White, chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, said tonight the "foreign policy issue, so far as it affects Great Britain and this war" should be left out of the Presidential campaign.

"The acts of the President in aiding Great Britain and the promises of Mr. Willkie to give full aid, amount to the same thing," the editor asserted in a statement issued in behalf of the committee.

Contract Bridge

Today's hand shows the leader of the master solvers' club in action with partner Baron Waldemar von Zedtwitz. Though void in the baron's suit, Fry reaches six diamonds. The bidding is neat, economical and of typical expert flavor. Fry adroitly manages the play, which is a bit ticklish and offers more than one worry to a declarer so ambitious as to try for 12 tricks on the hand.

South led the queen of spades, and though this tipped off declarer that the suit was probably bunched, he saw the easiest way to make his contract was to play for a cross-ruff. If this failed to work there were more perilous measures he could fall back upon.

He took the ace of spades, played the king and discarded a heart from dummy. A third spade he trumped with dummy's diamond eight, but North over-ruffed and led a diamond.

Fry won this with the king; he played another spade and trumped with the nine; North discarded a club. He took the ace, king of hearts, led a third heart and trumped with the diamond queen. Both opponents followed on the third round of hearts, luckily, establishing the fourth card in Fry's hand. He played the ace of clubs, threw his losing spade, and a club ruff put him in his hand to draw the remaining trumps.

Cleveland's Son Declares Willkie 'Better Democrat'

More than 500 persons attended an anti-third term rally, first meeting of the new Willkie Democratic Club of Montgomery County, last night at the Chevy Chase Woman's Club.

Richard Cleveland, of Baltimore, son of Grover Cleveland, principal speaker, declared Willkie is a "better Democrat" than President Roosevelt, having "stood fast to the Democratic principles in the 1932 platform." A vote "for Roosevelt is a vote to scuttle the United States," he declared.

Other speakers were George A. Finch, of Washington, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and George Hoover, Montgomery County attorney.

Court to Rule On Secondary Picketing Plan

Appeals Bench Denies Injunction, However, To Washington Cafe

The United States Court of Appeals here yesterday ordered a hearing on the legality of secondary picketing by labor organizations.

The court granted a special appeal to Bernard Singer, proprietor of the Lafayette Cafe, 1621 H Street Northwest, who seeks an injunction against the A. F. L. Teamsters Union.

Singer sued in the District Court some months ago, asserting that his restaurant was being picketed by the teamsters because he bought ice from Consolidated Terminal Ice Co., with which the union was at odds.

Singer's attorneys asserted that Singer had nothing to do with the dispute between the ice company and the union. Picketing his restaurant, they argued, was an unlawful violation of Singer's rights and he was entitled to an injunction.

Singer also asked for $500,000 damages, alleging that he was libeled by placards carried by the pickets to the effect that he used "unfair" ice.

Justice James W. Morris of the District Court denied the union's motion to dismiss the action, but also refused to enjoin the picketing, holding that the situation was a labor dispute within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and therefore could not be affected by an injunction.

The Court of Appeals will be asked to hold that a case like Singer's is not a "labor dispute" and that the picketing against him amounts to an unlawful boycott.

Communist Party Barred From N.Y. Ballot

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 24 (AP).—A State supreme court justice today barred the Communist Party from the November 5 election ballot in New York.

Justice William H. Murray said testimony of witnesses from Franklin and Greene Counties at a hearing this week made him "unalterably convinced that there is not on the petition signatures of 50 persons from each of those counties obtained without fraud and concealment."

The party lost its place on the State ballot when its gubernatorial candidate failed to poll 50,000 votes in 1936.
